Having foretold the destruction of Jerusalem and the desolations that would attend it, Christ's prophetic discourse answered the second part of the disciples' question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" The prophet Daniel had foretold a time of great tribulation that was to come upon the church, with persecution of the saints of God through long, dark centuries until the time of the end. The Saviour's prophetic vision reviewed this long period. "Then shall be great tribulation," he said, "such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." But for the elect's sake, he said, for the sake of the Lord's people and the cause of truth on earth, those days were to be shortened. Even so the rise of the reform movement of the sixteenth century, and the setting free of the Word of God, cut short the days of tribulation, and brought the dawn of the era of light and knowledge that was to come with the time of the end. Dan. 12:4.

Next the Saviour's prophecy begins to deal with the signs by which believers may know when the end is drawing near. That no false theories of a secret coming of the Lord or of a quiet breaking of a millennium on earth might deceive those who are awakened to watch, the Saviour first of all describes the manner of his coming and warns against teachings that were to arise in the last days advocating a mystical, secret second advent:—

The Warning—Christ's Coming Visible to All

"Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before. Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth; behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt. 24:23-27.

Hastily, in few words, let us review the prophetic outline, watching to catch the true signals as earnestly as the mariner strains the eye to read surely the shore beacons on a dark night. The signs cannot fail us, for Christ said:—

"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Luke 21:25-28.

He that hath eyes to see, let him see these signs of his coming Lord:—

1. Signs in the heavens.

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days [the prophetic time of tribulation reaching through the Dark Ages] shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven." Matt. 24:29.

These signs began to appear at the appointed time, "immediately after the tribulation of those days."

"The Sun Shall Be Darkened"

On May 19, 1780, came the wonderful darkening of the sun, known in the list of unexplained phenomena as "the dark day" of 1780. Thoughtful hearts were impressed that the mysterious darkening of the sun was a sign from heaven. In a sermon preached by the Rev. Elam Potter, on May 28 of that same year, reference was made to the occurrence as follows:—

Then, as in our text, the sun was darkened; such a darkness as was probably never known before since the crucifixion of our Lord. People left their work in the house and in the field; travelers stopped; schools broke up at eleven o'clock; people lighted candles at noon-day; and the fire shone as at night.—"The Coming King," page 114.

The note of solemnity is caught in the following from the proceedings of the Connecticut House of Representatives, which adjourned when the great darkness came on. A Mr. Davenport rose in his place, urging that the session continue:—

Mr. Speaker, it is either the day of judgment, or it is not. If it is not, there is no need of adjourning. If it is, I desire to be found doing my duty. I move that candles be brought, and that we proceed to business.

"And the Moon Shall Not Give Her Light"

That old-time sermon by Dr. Potter says of the night following the dark day: "The moon, though in the full, gave no light, as in our text." R. M. Devins, in the work "Our First Century," says:—

THE FALLING STARS

The darkness of the following evening was probably as deep and dense as ever had been observed since the Almighty first gave birth to light; it wanted only palpability to render it as extraordinary as that which overspread the land of Egypt in the days of Moses.

"And the Stars Shall Fall From Heaven"

Years passed, and men's hearts were stirred as they studied the Word and saw that the great historic prophecies taught that the coming of the Lord was drawing near. In Europe and in America there was a revival of the preaching of the advent idea. Thousands of ministers of all denominations saw that the doctrine of Christ's second coming was to be emphasized. Just here came another great sign to cause men to give heed to the significance of passing events. On Nov. 13, 1833, came the thrilling display of falling stars, which is listed as one of the remarkable phenomena of the astronomical story. Professor Olmsted, of the astronomical department of Yale College, wrote:—

Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13, 1833, probably saw the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the pages of history. . . . The extent of the shower of 1833 was such as to cover no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface. From the middle of the Atlantic on the east to the Pacific on the west, and from the northern coast of South America to undefined regions among the British possessions on the north, the exhibition was visible, and everywhere presented nearly the same appearance.

It was indeed such a picture as that described among latter-day events by John in the Revelation:—

"And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." Rev. 6:13.

Over the whole Atlantic coast, from New England to the South, men witnessed what one writer describes as the greatest spectacle "ever beheld by man;" and an observer living at the time in Georgia wrote: "Everybody felt that it was the judgment, and that the end of the world had come." Rather was it a signal that the hour of God's judgment was drawing near at hand; for very clearly the Scriptures tell us that the time of the last generation is to be the judgment hour in heaven. Every case comes in review as the records of heaven are opened both of the living and of the dead; for when Christ comes the judgment has already determined to all eternity who are the righteous and who are the wicked. These signs, therefore, were to warn men to prepare for the judgment hour, and to arouse the church of Christ to do the work that must be done in proclaiming the gospel message just before the end.

2. Signs in the social and industrial world.

"And upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; . . . men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Luke 21:25, 26.

The prophet James describes latter-day conditions with a warning to the careless rich, and a warning also to the laborer and the poor not to be drawn into strife and contention for this world's possessions while the judgment hour is passing in heaven above and the righteous Judge is at the door:—

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in the day of slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned; behold, the Judge standeth before the door." James 5:1-9.

It is well known that some of the nations of Europe have felt that only a plunge into war could for the moment heal the dissensions due to social discontent and industrial strife. Yet war can but intensify the conditions, and impoverish the survivors. But a few years ago Lord Avebury, better known as Sir John Lubbock, discussing the impoverishing of the European countries by preparation for war, said in the "Review of Internationalism":—

The religion of Europe is not Christianity, but the worship of the god of war. . . . Unless something is done, the condition of the poor in Europe will grow worse and worse. It is no use shutting our eyes. Revolution may not come soon, not probably in our time, but come it will, and as sure as fate there will be an explosion such as the world has never seen.

Mr. Frederick Townsend Martin, of New York, wrote an earnest warning concerning these conditions, in Hearst's Magazine for September, 1913. Addressing his words to the "idle rich," he said:—

The Romans were overconfident, and they were swept from the earth. The French overdid the thing, and rivers of blood flowed. The English again and again have forced the workers into open rebellion. All countries, including ours, seem ripe for revolution.

Fifty years ago there was scarcely a voice of protest; indeed, there was hardly anything to protest against. Twenty-five years ago the protest was clear and distinct, and we understood it. Ten years ago the protest found expression in a dozen weekly publications; but today the protest is circulated not by hundreds or thousands of printed copies of books, pamphlets, magazines, and newspapers, but actually by the million.

This propaganda of protest has its daily papers that are distinctive and published for that purpose, and that purpose only. It has its magazines and tens of thousands of weekly papers. Only a fool sneers at such a volume of publicity as that.

The warnings that hundreds of us are uttering may be ignored. The squandering may go on, the vulgar bacchanalia may be prolonged, the poor may have to writhe under the iron heel of the iron lord—the dance of death may go on until society's "E" string snaps, and then the Vesuvius of the underworld will belch forth its lava of death and destruction. Anarchy may reign for a period, values may be cast aside, reason may be flung to the winds, and history may reenact one of its red dramas; then out of the chaos and disorder will come as there always has come a new society.

But this time, we know by the sure word of prophecy, there will come, not a new order of things on earth, but the utter end of this wicked, warring world, with the destruction of sin and sinners.

3. Signs in the political world,—the arming of the nations.

As the hour of God's judgment came in heaven, according to the view of the prophet, he saw the nations rousing to the strife, and heard voices in heaven crying:—

"And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged." Rev. 11:18.

The prophet Daniel describes this judgment scene in heaven that closes Christ's ministry before his second coming. (See Dan. 7:9, 10.) This investigative judgment begins with the dead, reviewing every case as recorded in the books above, and closing with the cases of the living. While this solemn work is proceeding in the heavenly temple, on earth the nations are angry, preparing war, as the prophet Joel long ago said; waking up the mighty men, even the weak saying, I am strong; beating plowshares, or the products of the field, into swords. This is the picture that prophecy gives of the last days. And the prophecy says also that while the nations are fulfilling this word, multitudes of the thoughtless and the unprepared will be crying, "Peace and safety," and talking about beating swords into plowshares and learning war no more. All through this generation we have seen these prophecies fulfilling before our eyes, and now the earth fairly shakes with the shock of titanic combat. Events are hastening on to the end.

4. The most joyful sign,—the gospel message to the world.

Surest and brightest and gladdest sign of all of the coming of the Lord is the world-wide missionary movement, sending the light shining into every dark corner of the earth. Christ's own word declared:—

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Matt. 24:14.

What does it mean? It means that the time of the prophecy has come; and while the nations are preparing for the final conflict, the message of the gospel of peace must reach the yet unevangelized peoples in all the dark portions of the earth. About 22,000 missionaries are in the field, and many thousands of trained native converts are spreading the Word of God. This remarkable development has come in our time, and is a fulfillment of prophecy.

The last century has been a century of missionary activity, culminating in a truly world-wide work in our own time. Century after century passed after these prophecies were uttered, and the world saw no such movement. But with the coming of the latter days we have seen just such a world-wide gospel movement as the prophecy demands for the time of the last generation.

The last phase of this gospel work, according to the vision given John in the Revelation, was to be the rise of a movement proclaiming the soon coming of the Lord, declaring the hour of God's judgment come, and calling all men—in Christendom as well as in heathendom—to take their stand upon the

New Testament platform of the "commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."

Read the plain and graphic description of the movement in Rev. 14:6-14, ending with the coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven.

When the time of this generation came, this special gospel movement of the prophecy arose; and the special reform message of the prophecy is being carried swiftly to all the world today. We thank God for what all the great missionary societies are doing to spread the gospel of Christ's kingdom. But the "sure word" demands that in these last times there shall be this special closing proclamation of the "everlasting gospel;" for when this gospel of the kingdom has reached all peoples with its call to prepare to meet the Lord, the day of human probation closes; then quickly must come the loosing of the four winds, the great battle of the day of God Almighty, the quaking of the earth, the coming of the Lord, the destruction of sin, and the eternal salvation of all who have put their trust in God and have put away their sins through faith in Jesus Christ.

Christ's Second Coming

A Bible Study

1. What promise did Christ make concerning his coming?

"Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14:1-3.

2. To whom is salvation promised at Christ's appearing?

"So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9:28.

3. Following the signs of his coming, what did Christ say would take place?

"And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Luke 21:27.

4. Has the exact time of Christ's coming been revealed?

"But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." Matt. 24:36.

5. In view of this fact, what does Christ tell us to do?

"Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." Verse 42.

Manner of Christ's Coming

6. At his ascension, how did the angels say Christ would come again?

"And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1:9-11.

NOTE.—When Jesus was taken up into heaven, he left his disciples, visibly and in person, "and a cloud received him out of their sight." So also, according to this promise, when he comes the second time he will come visibly and in person, and seated upon the clouds of heaven; for, said the angels to his disciples, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

7. How did Christ himself say he would come?

"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels." Matt. 16:27. "Then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Matt. 24:30. "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels." Luke 9:26.

8. How many will see him when he comes?

"Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him." Rev. 1:7.

9. What wonderful demonstration will accompany the Lord's coming?

"The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trumpet of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. 4:16.

10. How visible is his coming to be?

"For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt. 24:27.

The Object of His Coming

11. For what purpose did Christ say he would come again?

"I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14:2, 3.

12. What part will the angels have in this event?

"And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Matt. 24:31.

13. What takes place at the sounding of the trumpet?

"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trumpet of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. 4:16.

14. What is done with the righteous living?

"Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4:17.

15. What change will then take place in both the living and the sleeping saints?

"We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. 15:51-53.

He Will Come for His Own

"And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels." Mal. 3:17.

He comes not as a thief in the sense of stealing in stealthily and quietly upon the world and purloining goods to which he has no right. But he comes to take to himself his dearest treasure, his sleeping and living saints, whom he has purchased with his own precious blood, whom he has wrested from the power of death in fair and open conflict, and for whom his coming will be no less open and triumphant. It will be with the brilliancy and splendor of the lightning as it shines from the east to the west. Matt. 24:27. It will be with a sound of a trumpet that shall pierce to earth's lowest depths, and with a mighty voice that shall wake the sainted sleepers from their dusty beds. Matt. 24:31, margin; 1 Thess. 4:16.

We Must Be There

We must back in the smiles of God, to whom we have become reconciled, and sin no more; we must put off the rent garments of our warfare, for the white robes of triumph, and feel that the conflict is ended and the victory gained; we must exchange the toil-worn, dusty girdle of our pilgrimage for the glorious vesture of immortality, and feel that sin and the curse can never more pollute us. O day of rest and triumph and every good, delay not thy dawning! Let the angels at once be sent to gather the elect. Let the promise be fulfilled which bears in its train these matchless glories.

"EVEN SO, COME, LORD JESUS."

The Advent Review and Sabbath Herald

ISSUED EACH THURSDAY BY THE Review & Herald Publishing Association

Terms in Advance
One Year.....$2.00 Six Months.....$1.00
Three Months.....$0.50

No extra postage is charged to countries within the United States and Canada.

Make all Post-office Money Orders payable at the Washington, D. C., post office (not Takoma Park Station).
Address all communications and make all Drafts and Express Money Orders payable to

REVIEW AND HERALD
Takoma Park Station Washington, D. C.

[Entered as second-class matter, Aug. 14, 1903, at the post office at Washington, D. C., under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.]

The Advent Review And Sabbath Herald

"Here is the Patience of the Saints: Here are they that keep the Commandments of God, and the Faith of Jesus." Rev. 14: 12.

VOL. 91

TAKOMA PARK STATION, WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1914

No. 41

THE SERMON

The Present Crisis *

THERE is no doubt about the crisis; the very nerves of the world have been tingling over this crisis for more than a month. Six weeks ago the first page of the morning paper was taken up with what seemed to be important news,—a great strike somewhere, or perhaps the latest word concerning the home rule question, as people were waiting from day to day to see whether there would be a revolution in Ulster; or very likely it was the Mexican war, and we were almost breathless at times to see whether this country would be involved. But for the last month industrial troubles, the home rule question, and the Mexican war have been altogether subordinate; they have been given little space on the inside of the newspaper, and the first page has been filled with glaring headlines of such news as we have never read before. It has not been a local crisis; it has not been a special trouble in one nation; many nations have been involved. The calendar for the last month is certainly very striking; just let me give you a sketch of it: War has been declared among the nations during this month as follows: August 1, Germany against Russia; August 3, Germany against France; August 5, Great Britain against Germany; August 6, Austria against Russia; August 8, Montenegro against Austria; August 10, France against Austria; August 13, Great Britain against Austria; August 23, Austria against Japan; August 28, Austria against Belgium. It is no wonder that with remarkable unanimity the papers, both secular and religious, have put that word Armageddon over their accounts of this war,—no wonder, I say; for in all its history the world has never seen a conflict like this. One writer in speaking of this matter closed his article with this brief statement: "We face perhaps the most awful winter that mankind ever faced."

There is one thing very striking about this situation, and that is that the most terrible conflict of all the ages comes after years of prophecies of peace. And it certainly was almost ironical that some of the delegates who went to Europe this summer to attend the Peace Conference were unable to reach their destination on account of war. It is no wonder that a cartoonist has pictured the Peace Palace at The Hague with the sign in large letters, "For sale on account of war."

What have been some of the reasons given for these peace prophecies? They are worth noting. You have heard them; you have read them. A writer in the Bible Magazine for September, sums up the matter in these words:—

"The reflective reader of history has found his mind returning again and again from the sensational features of the situation, and from the immediate issues of conflict, to the exploded theories, striking anomalies, contradictions, and surprises incident to the upheaval. Ever since the Franco-Prussian War peace lovers have been giving assurances of the unlikelihood of another great struggle among the nations representing Western civilization, assurances that had come to have almost axiomatic force. What now?

"The doctrine of the brotherhood of man was advancing, they said; the world was becoming one; a great war would never come again. But the first shot sent race hatred to a white heat, and expressions of national pride became absurdly extravagant.

"Modern civilization, we were told, was too far advanced to tolerate a great conflict. It was actually found less advanced than the preparations for war.

"An international peace tribunal, housed in a magnificent peace temple at The Hague, surely marked a distinct stage in the peaceful adjustment of international disputes. Today it is even suggested that this newly dedicated edifice be used as a military hospital. . . .

"The magnitude of international commerce must simply forbid such a disturbance of the world's business; for were not the affairs of nations chiefly commercial today? Already international trade has lost its tens of millions, but its voice is scarcely heard in the uproar.

"Since the world's bankers controlled the 'sinews of war,' without their permission armies could not make a hostile move. The armies moved first, and the bankers have been adjusting themselves to the situation as best they can.

"But there was the balance of power, so completely developed since the Triple Alliance was paralleled by the Triple Entente. The balance was too nicely adjusted; the assassination of one man upset it all.

"In the presence of such immense armies and armaments, what government would dare to start a great conflict? But the burdened nations had come to feel that the only way to rid themselves of the intolerable weight was to settle the question of supremacy by war rather than by the never-ending strain and tension of costly preparation for it.

"Solemn alliances and treaties between nations should weigh heavily against the opening of hostilities. What became of the Triple Alliance after Germany and Austria became involved with other powers? Did the opposing powers really believe it would hold together when the test came?

"The neutrality of Belgium and of Luxemburg was an additional factor on the side of peace. But the treaties that guaranteed the security of these small states proved as frail as the paper on which they were spread.

"And so on through the list of obstructions that humanity had vainly placed in the way of the great historical forces."

These are some of the prophecies of peace, and they have all failed, and today the world faces a situation which it is impossible to describe in words. We get brief glimpses of it; but we can hardly imagine what it means to have lines of actual conflict extend for hundreds of miles; to have machine guns in operation that mow down whole ranks of men as a mowing machine cuts down the blades of grass. And the war is not confined to any one element; we have contending forces on the land numbering millions on each side; we have contending forces on the water with dreadnaughts and superdreadnaughts, and destroyers of all kinds; and wonderful to say, and new to tell, we have conflicts in the air. No one has ever known of such a situation.

This situation is not confined to the Old World; that is to say, the crisis itself is not confined there. I was reading in the morning paper today a report of a discussion in Congress only yesterday when the leader of the majority party of the House of Representatives used these words: "The American people are facing a crisis — one of the most serious crises that this country has faced since the Civil War — brought about by conditions over which they had no control." The whole world is involved in this crisis.

* Address delivered by W. W. Prescott, Aug. 30, 1914, Washington, D. C., reported by Miss Margaret Weir.

And now I want to ask you one simple question: Why have all these prophecies of peace failed? why have they come to naught? It is because these prophecies were not founded on the Word of God; it is because they were human speculation. There has been a sentiment created — a false sentiment — that the world is growing better, that we are approaching a millennium of peace and good will, and that there can therefore be war no more. And while these words were, as it were, upon the lips of the peace prophets, this terrible struggle broke out. Mark it and remember it, these prophecies of peace have failed because they are contrary to God's Word. This emphasizes the importance of the prophecies of the Bible and a proper understanding of them. I know very well that there have been absurd, illogical, fantastic interpretations of prophecy; I know very well that for a generation, again and again, somebody has risen and set a definite time for the world to come to an end, and has based his prediction upon a so-called interpretation of prophecy; and just as these peace prophecies have utterly failed, so have these other prophecies come to naught.

But there is a safe and sane interpretation of the prophecies of the Scriptures. They are given for our benefit; they are not given to tantalize us, merely to arouse false hopes, to set false ideas afloat. They are given for our instruction. In 2 Peter 1:19 we read as follows: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts." This is the estimate placed upon prophecy in the Scripture, and there is no effort better worth the attention of intelligent people at this time than to seek prayerfully, intelligently, an understanding of the prophecies of the Scripture.

In order that we may be able to make a correct interpretation and application of prophecy referring to the present situation, I propose to call your attention briefly to an outline of this world's history extending over a period of over twenty-five hundred years. Necessarily this must be a mere outline. I think many who are here have heard a more definite exposition of these prophecies in this tent. I shall be obliged to take for granted some things. But I want to call your attention to a sweep of the prophetic word which will take you down through history until this very day, and I do this in order that you may see in a clear way that there are scriptures that apply to this very hour,— scriptures that explain this very situation far differently from these prophecies that I have read here. Let us notice, then, first in the book of Daniel, chapter 2, the dream of Nebuchadnezzar:—

"Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay."

The head of gold is Babylon; the breast and arms represent the Medo-Persian kingdom, which succeeded the Babylonian kingdom in 538 B. C. The thighs represent Grecia, which succeeded Medo-Persia in 331 B. C. "And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron." In this you at once recognize what Gibbon has called the iron monarchy of Rome. The fourth kingdom was to be divided. Mark the situation which existed in Europe when the present war broke out. The marriage relation bound together nearly all these large kingdoms; they seemed to be united as one brotherhood. "But they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay. And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Now mark the outline of this prophecy,— Babylon, then Medo-Persia, then Grecia, then Rome, then divided Rome, and an effort to unite these divided kingdoms in one. "But they shall not cleave one to another. . . . And in the days of these kings [in the days of this divided state of the fourth kingdom] shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." The record does not say that it shall gradually absorb and convert all these other kingdoms, but, "It shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." No basis there for looking for a millennium of peace at the close of this world's history! It is more in harmony with that scripture in the second psalm, "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." That is the picture that the prophetic word gives of conditions and experiences at the close of this world's history.

In the seventh chapter of the book of Daniel, an outline is given again of these four kingdoms, with an added specification; and I read concerning the fourth beast: "After this I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns." The interpretation of this prophecy is given in this very chapter, in the seventeenth verse: "These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth." Then the prophet desired to know more about the fourth beast, and this answer was given him: "The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, . . . and the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise." Here we have a very definite prophecy of the division of the four kingdoms into ten kingdoms. And this whole prophecy closes with this prediction: "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." These prophecies carry us down from the time of Babylon in one grand sweep of the world's history until the close of earth's history and the setting up of the everlasting kingdom of God.

We have prophecies in the New Testament that cover the ground from the first advent to the second in a more definite way, filling in, as it were, the outline of these prophecies. I can only refer to them.

The second and third chapters of the book of Revelation record the prophecies of the seven churches, covering the experiences of the church from the time of the first advent to the time of the second advent. I wish to note just the closing words concerning the last church: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. 3:21. The seventh church, or the period covered by it, closes with the overcomers on the throne. That corresponds exactly with the prediction in the seventh chapter of Daniel, where it says the saints shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom. Mark that it is a question of a kingdom, of what kingdom shall be established on the earth; whether it will be these world powers, or whether they shall be cast aside and another kingdom set up on the earth which shall stand forever. The conflict closes with the overcomers on the throne.

In the sixth chapter of this same book we have the prophecy of the seals, and there are seven of these seals. The sixth seal is the last one describing conditions on the earth. Let me read it: "And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." Rev. 6:12, 13. That earthquake was the great earthquake of Lisbon, in 1755; the sun and moon were darkened in May, 1780, and the stars fell in November, 1833. We are under the sixth seal, the last one describing earthly conditions.

"And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" Verses 14-17. Those are the events under this sixth seal. The seventh seal introduces us to heavenly experiences.

Chapters 8 and 9 of this same book of prophecy give us another line of history under the symbol of the seven trumpets. Note the fullness of these prophecies. The seven churches cover the time from the first advent to the second advent, and give the spiritual side of the church. The seven seals cover practically the same time, and give the history of the church under oppression. The seven trumpets deal with about the same period, and give the history of the political powers used as a scourge against the church because of apostasy.

We have four trumpets mentioned in the eighth chapter. These four trumpets represent the attacks of the barbarians upon the Western Roman Empire. The first trumpet represents the attack of the Visigoths under the leadership of Alaric. This trumpet begins with A. D. 395, when these invasions began. Then came the Vandals from North Africa under the leadership of Genseric, from 428 to 476; meantime we have also Attila, who called himself the "Scourge of God," leading the Huns against the Western Empire; and the history of the Western Empire as one empire, closes with the downfall of Western Rome in 476, with Odoacer of the Heruli, as the new ruler. This brings us to the year 476, when we find that the prophecy in the second chapter of Daniel, "the kingdom shall be divided," and that in the seventh chapter of the same book, that out of the fourth beast should come ten horns, are literally fulfilled.

In the ninth chapter of Revelation we have the fifth and sixth trumpets, and these deal with the invasion of the Mohammedans against the eastern division of Rome, whose capital was Constantinople.

The fifth trumpet describes the campaigns of the Arabian Mohammedans, beginning with their earliest operations after the rise of Mohammed, their prophet. The period assigned to them after "they had a king over them . . . whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon," is the symbolic period of five months, or 150 days, or 150 years of literal time. This began with the invasion of Nicomedia under the leadership of Othman. This period, beginning in 1299, would end in 1449. The fifth trumpet was followed immediately by the sixth trumpet, which describes the work of the Turkish Mohammedans, and the period assigned to them is in prophetic time "an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year," or 391 years and a fraction. Reckoning this period from 1449, it would extend to 1840, at which time the power of the Mohammedans "to slay the third part of men" would be restricted.

We have now covered in outline the time from that first prophecy in Babylon, about 600 B. C., to our own generation, A. D. 1840. There may be some in this audience who can remember what happened in 1840, when Turkey really lost its power and became subject to the world powers. From that time until now Turkey has been known as the "Sick Man of the East."

After 1840 comes the seventh trumpet, and I read its announcement: "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11:15. Away back, over six hundred years before Christ, Daniel, the Hebrew captive in Babylon, made an outline of history and looked forward to the time of the division of the fourth kingdom. And he said, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, . . . and the kingdom shall not be left to other people." And away down in the stream of time the prophet John was given his vision of the seventh trumpet, and there was a voice in heaven answering, as it were, the voice of the prophet in Babylon, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever."

Next the prophet gives a picture of what goes on in connection with Christ's taking the kingdom that he might reign forever and ever. Let me read it: "And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshiped God, saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come." A madness seizes upon the nations. What better evidence can we have of such madness than we see at this very hour? It hardly seems that the cool judgment of sane men would lead in such a conflict as this. "The nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth." "The nations were angry, and thy wrath is come,"—a time of judgment, a time of reward. Daniel the prophet looked forward to this same time when he said, "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time;" and he adds, "Thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."

Every pulpit in the city of Washington ought this very day to be resounding with these prophecies. Why is it that those who ought to be expounding the Word to the people to give them clear vision concerning this time—not human speculation, not fantastic, illogical interpretations, but the simple, clear interpretation of God's Word that the people may "know the time—are not doing it? No matter what any one may say to you, if you find light and evidence of God's leading and God's interpretation in what you hear under this tent, give it serious and candid consideration.

But what is the apparent cause of this situation? A Servian student shot Archduke Ferdinand and his wife, of Austria, as they were on a trip in Bosnia. Austria interpreted that as meaning that there was a Servian conspiracy against the Austrian monarchy. You will remember that it was only a short time ago that Austria seized upon Bosnia and Herzegovina. No wonder that there was a spirit of unrest. Servia really humbled herself in the dust before Austria, but declined to yield her very life, and Austria declared war. What was at stake in this? It was this question of the kingdom. Austria thought there was a conspiracy against the kingdom. It must be put down at all hazards, and Austria declared war on the basis that there was a conspiracy against the kingdom to overthrow the government.

Sin is a conspiracy against the government of God. Have you ever analyzed sin to make it mean to you that sin involves the dethroning of God and the putting of oneself in the place of God? That is what is involved in sin. Sin, if allowed to go on, would mean simply the dethronement of God and the taking of the kingdom by another. The whole question is a kingdom question. In the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah there is a description of such a rebellion, and mark that the leader of this rebellion is Lucifer: "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north."

Sin means to dethrone God and put another government in the place of the government of God. That has been the purpose from the time sin was introduced into the world. The whole conflict from that time to this very hour is over the question of the kingdom. Shall it be a kingdom in defiance of the law of God, or shall it be a kingdom of peace and righteousness, the kingdom of God? That is the question that is being tried out upon this earth. This battle began in heaven, and was transferred to this earth. In the twelfth chapter of the book of Revelation, the seventh verse, we read: "And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels."

It was Satan's plan to obtain a foothold here by usurpation, by deceit, and to become the god of this world. Our Saviour recognized him. He said, "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me." At the very time of his crucifixion he said, "Now is the judgment of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out." That was through the cross of Christ.

I should like to have you note, in passing, that the law of the kingdom of God is the very foundation of his throne; it is the very constitution of his government; it cannot be overthrown and the world survive. And the weakness of the world at this present time, in this most fearful of all crises of the world's history, has come upon the world because it has rejected God and his law.

The foundation of this world is the law of God; justice and judgment, righteousness and truth, are the very foundation upon which the government of God rests, and the security and stability of this world actually rest upon the firmness of this law. To reject this law, to set it aside, to attempt to substitute something else in its place, to attempt to put church legislation in the place of the law of God, means treason, rebellion, and finally absolute ruin. Here are the words of the prophet:—

"The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof: because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. . . . And the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and not rise again." Why?—They have transgressed the everlasting covenant. They have broken God's law, therefore these things come necessarily.

The purpose of the gospel of Christ is to restore in this world the supremacy of this law of God,—that law just as it was given on Sinai. I have here a statement which I think is worth reading, because it presents in a few words the principles involved. I ask you to give it careful thought:—

"Revelation exhibits the restoration and establishment of the supremacy of the moral law.

"Herein it crowns the system of nature with perfection and completeness. The law of subordination leads up, step by step, to the supremacy of the moral law. But though in the world system the moral law is supreme by right, it is not supreme in fact. Its rule is disregarded and overthrown. The Bible unfolds the plan, and traces the story of the restoration of its supremacy. . . .

"The Bible is the story of a rebellion vanquished and subdued. It is the account of the victory of the divine goodness. In its course evil is overcome by good. The cross conquers. Love overcomes. The hand that holds the scepter was pierced on Calvary. The universe worships at the feet once fastened to the shameful tree. The anthem of its praise is, Worthy the Lamb! Through Jesus Christ all things are subjected to God. And when that subjection is complete, the Son himself shall give up the kingdom to the Father, 'that God may be all in all.'

"Thus the natural and the spiritual form one system. One law of subordination reigns throughout:—

"1. Inorganic nature subserves the organized world.

"2. In the vegetable kingdom inferior forms of life subserve superior forms.

"3. The vegetable kingdom subserves the animal.

"4. Lower animal races subserve the interests of higher.

"5. The material world subserves the mental.

"6. The physical subserves the moral.

"7. In the realm of mind all is subordinated to moral law.

"8. Moral law, though supreme in the world by right, is not supreme in fact.

"9. Revelation exhibits the restoration and establishment of the supremacy of the moral law."

Thus you see, step by step from the inorganic world up to the very highest intelligences, all are linked together, and are therefore sustained by the eternal, immutable law of God. The inevitable consequence of disregarding that law is that from the highest fallen angels down through man to the very lowest inorganic nature, the creation itself suffers, goes to rack and ruin; because at the head, angels and men have disregarded God's law, the very foundation of his whole government. This is why, the earth becomes weak; this is why it staggers to and fro like a drunken man; and it shall fall and not rise again, because of the disregard of God's law.

Now this restoration of the supremacy of God's law involves the whole work of Christ,—his incarnation, the first advent, his sacrifice on the cross, his resurrection from the dead, his ascension on high, his ministry in the sanctuary at this very time, and his second advent in glory. From the book of Genesis to the last book of the Bible we have prophecy upon prophecy foretelling this order of things, up to the very last step, the second advent. Of the first advent we have the time predicted. Daniel the prophet said, "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks." The time of the first advent was so well known, so well understood, that when John the Baptist appeared, men mused in their hearts whether he could be the Christ. Our Saviour's life upon earth, his rejection, his death, are foretold in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. There are prophecies concerning the second advent, not telling the day or the hour, for "of that day and hour knoweth no man," but telling the very generation that should see the event; and that generation is our generation. To his disciples, who saw him taken up into heaven, it was said, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him." The conditions of the world that foretell his second coming, the conditions in the professed church of God, conditions in the social world, in the political world, the strife between capital and labor, the wars and rumors of wars,—all these things are set before us in this word of prophecy, not as predictions that cannot be understood, but as what every prayerful student of the Bible may know for himself. Let me ask you at this time, this time which may be called this awful time, What can be more important to us than to know what these things mean according to the sacred Word of God? Let me tell you the time is very near—I do not prophesy how long, but the time is very near—when everything will give way before us, when the social order will crumble and fall; confusion will reign in the earth; no man will know what is his own, and no man will be sure of his life except as it is hid with Christ in God. I hope I can say a word that will lead you to consider seriously this time, and to realize that the greatest problem that faces every one of us is, What preparation shall I make for that day now so near at hand?

This great war is not Armageddon. It is not surprising that that word appears in the papers, but it is not Armageddon. This war is not the end. This war is a decided beginning of the end. There is yet time for us to face the situation and prepare for what is just before us. And what is the preparation needed? Not something fanciful or sentimental, but a straightforward, honest, and intelligent acceptance of the gospel of Christ, which writes the law of God in the heart and leads to obedience to that law in the life. "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." We are to be judged by this royal law of liberty. Faith in the atoning work of Christ leads to acceptance of him, and "being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." That same faith brings the indwelling Christ into the heart, to rule in the life, to reveal the divine character, to give victory over every evil thing. That is Christianity.

Now God calls upon us to establish peace; not that false peace that the false prophets foretell, but that peace which shall rule in the heart through Christ, that peace which comes from harmony with God, that peace of which the angels sang when they said, "Glory to God in the highest."

◆ ◆ ◆

"PRAY that we may willing be Rough and rugged paths to tread,
And that we may always see Yonder city just ahead.
For we know whate'er betide,
Our blessed Lord will always guide
Repentant sinners to his side,
May we of that tried One say,
'Every day for him I'll pray.'"

This Extra should be read in every home, hence the low price for wide distribution

The Advent Review And Sabbath Herald

Vol. 92

Takoma Park Station, Washington, D. C.

No. 23

Price of this EXTRA
15 for $.10
25 for .15
50 for .30
100 for .50
1000 for 4.00

THE METEORIC SHOWER, NOV. 13, 1833

The Signs of Our Times Or, The Significance of Current Events in the Light of Prophecy

By C. P. Bollman

Wonderful things are revealed in the Bible, and living as we are at the focal point alike of profane history and divine prophecy, many of these things pertain to our own day. Truly—

"We are living, we are dwelling,
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling—
To be living is sublime."

Signs in the Heavens

Twelve or more great lines of Bible prophecy point unerringly to this age, to the very time in which we live, as the most eventful of all the ages since the world began; and of these last days, our Saviour himself, the greatest of all the prophets, said:—

"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Luke 21:25-27.

In Matt. 24:29, 30, some of these things are described a little more in detail: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

The Sun Darkened

Not all these things have yet been fulfilled, but beginning with the notable dark day of May 19, 1780, these words have met, and are still meeting, wonderful and exact fulfillment. The Lord in his mercy gives us "line upon line," as well as "precept upon precept." He spreads his warnings over many years; by his signs he speaks to his people; by his judgments he would fain arouse his church to renewed diligence, and turn the ungodly to righteousness.

Noah preached for full one hundred and twenty years that a flood was coming: now for something less than one hundred and thirty-five years the signs foretold by our Lord have been testifying to both the church and the world the coming of the flood of fire that ere long is to engulf and destroy the world that now is.—this wicked modern world,—even as the flood of waters engulfed and destroyed the wicked antediluvian world.

In the providence of God the western continent was reserved as an asylum, a refuge, for the oppressed, the downtrodden, the persecuted of all nations. Here Protestantism was to have its perfect development; and from these shores would go forth to all the world the message, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." And here it was that only a little more than a century and a third ago was fulfilled the prophecy of Amos 8:9: "I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day," a sign of "the great and terrible day of the Lord." For while the worldly-wise smile at the simplicity of those who see in any of the phenomena of nature warnings of impending destruction, those who witnessed these things recognized them as portents of the coming of the judgment and the outpouring of divine wrath upon the finally impenitent.

The Phenomenon Described

"Life of Edward Lee," No. 379 (old series), American Tract Society, has this testimony both as to the fact of this wonderful phenomenon and as to its effect upon the minds of those who witnessed it:—

"In the month of May, 1780, there was a very terrific dark day in New England, when 'all faces seemed to gather blackness,' and the people were filled with fear. There was great distress in the village where Edward Lee lived, 'men's hearts failing them for fear' that the judgment day was at hand; and the neighbors all flocked around the holy man; for his lamp was trimmed and shining brighter than ever amidst the unnatural darkness. Happy and joyful in God, he pointed them to their only refuge from the wrath to come, and spent the gloomy hours in earnest prayer for the distressed multitude."

Timothy Dwight, D. D., in "Connecticut Collections" says:—

"The 19th of May, 1780, was a remarkably dark day. Candles were lighted in many houses. The birds were silent, and disappeared. The fowls retired to roost. It was the general opinion that the day of judgment was at hand. The legislature of Connecticut was in session at Hartford, but being unable to transact business, adjourned."

Rev. Dr. Tenney, writing to the Massachusetts Historical Society in 1785, of the same event, said:—

The Cause Unknown

"Although the uncommon darkness which attracted the attention of all ranks of people in this part of the country on the 19th of May, 1780, was a phenomenon which several gentlemen of considerable literary ability have endeavored to solve, yet I believe you will agree with me that no satisfactory solution has yet appeared."—"Collections of Massachusetts Historical Society," 1798, Vol. I.

Of the duration, degree, and extent of the darkness, another authority bears this testimony:—

"On the 19th of May, 1780, an uncommon darkness took place all over New England, and extended to Canada. It continued about fourteen hours, or from ten o'clock in the morning until midnight. The darkness was so great that the people were unable to read common print or to tell the time of day by their watches, or to dine, or to transact their ordinary business without the light of candles. They became dull and gloomy, and some were excessively frightened. The fowls went to roost. Objects could not be distinguished but at a very little distance, and everything bore the appearance of gloom and night. Similar days have occasionally been known, though inferior in the degree or extent of their darkness. The causes of these phenomena are unknown. They certainly were not the result of eclipses."—Robert Sears's "Guide to Knowledge," New York, 1845, page 428. (Astor Library.)

How the People Were Impressed

As showing the lasting impression made by the dark day, witness the following, written by the poet Whittier many years after the event:—

"'Twas on a May day of the far old year
Seventeen hundred eighty, and there fell
Over the bloom and sweet life of the spring,
Over the fresh earth and heaven of noon,
A horror of great darkness, like the night
In the day of which the norland sagas tell—
The twilight of the gods."

"Birds ceased to sing, and all the barnyard fowls
Roosted; the cattle at the pasture bars
Lowled, and looked homeward; hats on leather wings
Flitted abroad; the sounds of labor died;
Men prayed, and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom blast of the trumpet shatter
The black sky."

The Failure of Moon and Stars

Foretelling the same event, the prophet Joel wrote:—

"The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come."
"The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining."
Joel 2:31; 3:15.

THE DARK DAY, MAY 19, 1780

These texts introduce two new features; namely, the peculiar appearance of the moon, and the absence of starlight. These specifications were literally fulfilled, in both moon and stars. Though at the time the moon was only a few hours past its full, when under ordinary circumstances it shines all night, Stone's "History of Beverly" (Massachusetts) says:—

"The night succeeding that day [May 19, 1780] was of such pitchy darkness that in some instances horses could not be compelled to leave the stable when wanted for service."

Of the impressions of that night, and of the appearance of the moon when later it became visible, Milo Bostwick wrote:—

"My father and mother, who were pious, thought the day of judgment was near. They sat up that night, during the latter part of which they said the darkness disappeared, and then the sky seemed as usual, but the moon, which was at its full, had the appearance of blood. The alarm that it caused and the frequent talk about it impressed it deeply on my mind."

Under ordinary circumstances even where there is no moon, the stars give sufficient light to make it comparatively easy for those who are familiar with their surroundings to get about, but according to the prophecy of Joel the stars, too, were to "withdraw their shining." This feature of the prophecy is thus incidentally emphasized by Dr. Tenney, who says:—

"The darkness of the following evening or night was probably as gross as has ever been observed since the Almighty fiat gave birth to light. I could not help conceiving at the time that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete. A sheet of white paper held within a few inches of the eyes was equally invisible with the blackest velvet."—Letter, December, 1785, "Collections of Massachusetts Historical Society," 1792, Vol. I.

Falling Stars

The next phenomenon mentioned by our Saviour as a sign of his approaching advent, was the falling of the stars: "The stars shall fall from heaven." The same event was foretold also in Rev. 6:13:—

"And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind."

In 1697, writing his "Sacred Theory of the Earth," and commenting upon Matt. 24:29, Bishop Burnet said:—

"The last sign we shall notice is that of 'falling stars.' And the stars shall fall from heaven," says our Saviour. Matt. 24:29. We are sure, from the nature of the thing, that this cannot be understood either of fixed stars or planets; for if either of these should tumble from the skies and reach the earth, they would break it all in pieces, or swallow it up as the sea does a sinking ship, and would put all the universe into confusion. It is necessary, therefore, by these stars, to understand either fiery meteors falling from the middle region of the air, or blazing comets and stars. No doubt there will be all sorts of fiery meteors at that time; and among others, those that are called falling stars."—Page 486.

If we accept the bishop's very reasonable view of the meaning of our Saviour's words, as it would seem all must do, it must be admitted also that the prophecy met a most accurate and literal fulfillment in the great meteoric shower of Nov. 13, 1833. Of the extent of this phenomenon, Professor Olmsted, of Yale College, wrote:—

"The shower of 1833 was such as to cover no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface, from the middle of the Atlantic on the east to the Pacific on the west; and from the northern coast of South America to undefined regions among the British possessions on the north, the exhibition was visible, and everywhere presented nearly the same appearance. This is no longer to be regarded as a terrestrial but as a celestial phenomenon; and shooting stars are now to be no more viewed as casual productions of the upper regions of the atmosphere, but as visitants from other worlds, or from the planetary voids?" The Connecticut Observer, of Nov. 25, 1833, said:—

"We pronounce the raining of fire which we saw on Wednesday morning last, an awful type, a sure forerunner, a merciful sign of the great and dreadful day which the inhabitants of the earth will witness when the sixth seal shall be opened. . . . A more correct picture of a fig tree casting its [unripe] fruit when

This earthquake was felt over nearly all of Europe, large sections of Africa and Asia, and as far west as the eastern coasts of North and South America. Ninety thousand lives were in a few moments snuffed out by it, and the property loss ran into untold millions of dollars. But while the greatest in extent and severity within historic times, the Lisbon earthquake is only one of many serving to emphasize the instability of what we sometimes rather boastfully refer to as terra firma.

THE LISBON EARTHQUAKE

blown by a mighty wind, it is not possible to behold."

Many more equally interesting statements might be quoted, but these will suffice, for no one will have the hardihood to deny a fact of history so well attested as the great meteoric shower of 1833.

Signs on the Earth

But our Saviour spoke not only of signs in the heavens, but also of portents that would appear upon the earth, saying, "There shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places." Matt. 24:7.

Famines

Space would fail us even to give a list of the various famines, whose victims have been numbered by hundreds of thousands. We can mention only a few. In 1837-38, 800,000 persons perished by famine in Northwest India. Twenty-eight years later, 1,000,000 perished from the same cause in Bengal and Orissa. Only twelve years later, 5,000,000 out of a population of 30,000,000 perished by famine in the Madras presidency alone. During the ten years from 1891 to 1901 India lost 8,000,000 in population on account of famine, or an average of 800,000 each year.

This is a terrible record, to say nothing of famines in Russia, Ireland, China, and other countries during the same period of earth's history.

Pestilences

In the nine years from 1896 to 1904 inclusive, black death, or bubonic plague, claimed victims to the number of 3,385,430. According to Hecker, 25,000,000 persons died of plague in Europe during the fourteenth

Volcanic Eruptions

Closely associated with earthquakes are volcanoes. The greatest destruction by these has been in Italy, in the Strait of Sunda, and in the Windward Islands.

Beginning with the notable eruption of A. D. 79 that overwhelmed the cities of Her-century, an average of 250,000—a quarter of a million a year for the whole hundred years.

A RAILWAY STRIKE

Earthquakes

But even more startling and striking in some respects is the increase of earthquakes in frequency and violence. From only sixteen recorded earthquakes during the 1796 years from B. C. 1700 to A. D. 96, such disturbances increased to an average of eight a year for the 1750 years from A. D. 96 to A. D. 1846. We select this date because it was then the seismograph was first introduced, since which time many minor earthquakes have been noted that would otherwise have escaped observation.

Among the destructive earthquakes, that of Lisbon in 1755 stands forth preminent.

culaneum and Pompeii, Italy's great volcano, Vesuvius, has claimed tens of thousands of human victims, besides burying out of sight many millions of dollars' worth of property.

In August, 1883, over thirty-five thousand persons lost their lives by the explosion and utter destruction of the island of Krakatau, in the Strait of Sunda, and the tidal wave occasioned by it. The property loss also was very great.

But in some respects the most terrible of all such disasters was that of Mont Pelée, island of Martinique, May 12, 1902. Between Mont Pelée and the bay was St. Pierre, a city of 30,000 inhabitants not one of whom escaped. All were in a moment ushered into eternity. The bursting of the mountain released a large volume of combustible gases, which speedily enveloped the doomed city. Then in an instant followed an explosion that in a moment destroyed every living thing, not only in the city, but as far as the gas covering extended. People were not burned to death,—there was not time for that,—they died where they stood, sat, or reclined, surrounded by flame and even filled by it, for the very air they were breathing became instantly combustible. All of this is most suggestive of the time foretold by the apostle Peter, in the words, "The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." 2 Peter 3:10.

Increase of Cyclones

Our Saviour's words, "The sea and the waves roaring," find their fulfillment in tidal waves, tempests, tornadoes, etc., now so familiar to us all. All these have been greatly multiplied in modern times. Only a few years ago, well within the memory of men and women yet active, tornadoes, popularly called cyclones, were of rare occurrence. Now, however, they are quite common, even in regions formerly supposed to be wholly exempt from them. Some years ago the late Dr. Talmage, after recounting a number of the then more recent tornadoes, said:—

"Satan, prince of the powers of the air, never made such cyclonic disturbances as he has in our day. And am I not right in saying that one of the characteristics of the times in which we live is disasters cyclonic?"

Signs in the Social World

When considering modern social conditions, the first fact that confronts us is that never before in the history of our race was a high civilization so world-wide, a good degree of learning so general, as now. Papers, magazines, books, schools are everywhere. Modern conveniences abound, and it is difficult to get beyond the reach of steam or electric transportation, or away from the electric telegraph and telephone, to say nothing of the demonstrated possibilities of wireless teleperilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts." 2 Tim. 3:1-6.

Signs in the Industrial World

One of the most significant signs of the times is the great conflict that is on between capital and labor, between the rich and the poor, between "big business" and the masses of the people. This is touched only indirectly in our Lord's great prophecy of the twenty-fourth of Matthew, but in the second chapter of Habakkuk and the fifth chapter of James so many details are given that it is impossible to mistake either the import of the prophecy or the time of its application. This apostle says:—

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long paraphy and telephony, or of submarine and aerial navigation.

SIGN PROPHECIES OF THE LORD'S RETURN

Revealed 2500 Years Ago

And the wonder of it all is that the marvelous achievements of this age were revealed to a prophet of God twenty-five hundred years ago. Said the angel, "But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Dan. 12:4.

As there never was a time when knowledge was so general as now, so there never has been in any past age a time when people were running to and fro upon the face of the earth as they are doing now.

Another phase of modern social life is foretold in the Scriptures in these words: "As it was in the days of Noe," "even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." Luke 17:26, 30.

The days of Noe were strongly marked by pleasure seeking and wickedness. Ours is likewise a wicked age, a pleasure-loving age, and in this it resembles the days that were before the flood, when "they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage." Matt. 24:38. Not that these things are wrong in themselves, but wrong when they become the end, or object, instead of means to right ends. "Behold," says the Lord by his prophet, "this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fullness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy." Eze. 16:49.

The Times Perilous

For obvious reasons we cannot go into details, but the well-informed reader needs only to be referred to these things. Hasty and ill-assorted marriages and equally hasty divorces, together with the social evil with its hideous white slavery, are all too well known to require more than the merest mention.

A high civilization does not mean a high standard of morals. Babylon, Rome, and Greece are known to have been most licentious at the very zenith of their power, or rather of their magnificence. To far too great an extent our boasted modern civilization also is only a thin veneer, many times scarcely serving to conceal the grossest animalism. This very condition was foretold not only by our Lord in the words quoted above from the seventeenth of Luke, but also by the apostle Paul when he wrote:—

"This know also, that in the last days tience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; establish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." James 5:1-8.

To refer to this scripture is not to say that all employers are selfish and unjust, or that all employees are ground down and oppressed; but no one needs to be told that in this age of ease and luxury for the few and exacting toil and deprivation for the many, something is wrong. Conditions will not be improved, however, by strikes and riot.

Conditions Growing Worse

That conditions are growing worse rather than better, and in general the relations between capital and labor more strained, is evident. That this is so is abundantly testified by events at Ludlow, Colo., only last year, and also by an almost equally unfortunate clash between strikers and deputies at Roosevelt, N. J., no longer ago than January of this present year.

It is not our purpose to attempt to pass upon the merits of the controversy between employers and employees, between capital and labor, but simply to emphasize the fact that there is between them an irrepressible conflict; and that it is, according to the Scriptures, a most significant sign of the times.

Before the Door

While there is always room for question as to the merits of each particular case, there can be no question as to the principle involved, nor as to the general situation. The Bible says there is wrong and oppression; but instead of giving encouragement to violence and lawlessness, prophet and apostle alike counsel peace. "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." "Establish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth near." "Behold, the Judge standeth before the door."

Such is the counsel which divine inspiration gives at this time, and such are the plain statements of Holy Writ, big with meaning to those who are permitted to live in these last days; days made terrible on the one hand by wickedness and violence; but on the other hand full of encouragement to the child of God, because of promise of speedy and eternal deliverance.

Signs in the Political World

Turning to the political world we find conditions there also exactly as described in the divine Word. "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom," said our Saviour; and this has been true all through the ages. But, as in other things, these conditions become worse and worse as we near the end, until today we see a state of affairs absolutely unparalleled in all the history of the past. Never before has the world witnessed such scenes as are today being enacted in Europe, in Asia, in Africa, in the islands, and upon every sea. Even the western continent is not an exception, for hostile ships sail our seas. Canada is sending her sons and her ships to fight the battles of the Allies, while Mexico is still convulsed with civil war, as she has long been, and still seems likely to be.

Peace and Safety

Men talk of peace, and our own honored Secretary of State only a few months ago, in fulfillment of prophecy, as he seemed fondly to believe, caused a number of swords to be beaten into miniature plowshares. But the Lord, by the mouth of the prophet, says:—

"Proclaim ye this among the nations; Prepare war, stir up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up; beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong." Joel 3:9, 10, A. R. V.

And this prophecy of Joel clearly has its application in the last days, at which very time, according to both prophet and apostle, many will be saying, "Peace, peace; when there is no peace." In Isa. 2:3-5 and Micah 4:2-5 we are told what "many people" and "many nations" would say, and what they are saying; but the Lord says "war;" not that he wants war, but because while peace is on men's lips war is in their hearts.

THE "PEACE AND SAFETY" PROPHECY FULFILLED

Permanent peace can come only by the coming and reign of the Prince of Peace. And his throne must first of all be established in the heart of the individual. Nevertheless, men will continue to follow, to their eternal undoing, this will-o'-the-wisp, the ignis fatuus of an enduring man-made peace. "For," writes the apostle, "when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape." 1 Thess. 5:3.

Signs in the Religious World

It is eminently fitting that this study of some of the many signs of our times should close with at least a brief reference to signs in the religious world. And here, as already noted, we find a two-sided picture. On the one hand, we find faith; on the other, unbelief; on the one hand, godly lives, while on the other, licentiousness abounds. But in the midst of it all God's work goes forward; and today we see a world, while still wicked and largely indifferent to divine truth, nevertheless belted by the gospel message. If the work is not already accomplished, we stand as it were upon the very eve of the time of which our Saviour spoke when he said, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Matt. 24:14.

The Gospel to All Nations

Today there is not a nation that has not heard more or less of the gospel of the Son of God. Probably the Lord does not design that we shall know just how near we are to the accomplishment of this great work; but there is great significance in the fact that in this generation, when all the other signs to which we have referred are testifying that the end is near, united Christendom should adopt for its slogan (as it has done) the motto, "The gospel to all the world in this generation?"

Go where you will, and in every national and international convention or conference of Christian people, you will see prominently displayed this soul-inspiring motto. Only a few years ago it suddenly became the rallying cry of every Protestant missionary society the world around. And today, notwithstanding war and commotion, the work of evangelizing the world is steadily progressing. Indeed, the scourge of war seems to make people everywhere all the more ready to listen to the divine message of "on earth peace, good will to men."

Not Conversion, but Warning

Our Saviour does not say the world shall be converted by this gospel, and then shall the end come; but he does say, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come;" and today we see this sign, if not entirely fulfilled, certainly in the very last stages of complete fulfillment—a grand consummation of a grand work; the sure harbinger of the glorious coming of the Son of man to reap the harvest of the earth, to take to himself his waiting, expectant people.

Prepare to Meet Thy God

And the fact that there are now in the world, not a few merely, but many who are looking for the speedy return of our Lord, is in itself a significant sign of our times. History tells us that there was at the time of the first advent a condition of general expectancy of the coming of the promised Deliverer. This was true not only of the Jews, but of the philosophers and poets shared in it, if not equally with the Jews certainly in a high degree. The wise men from the East were not Jews, but men of another nation; but they responded to the divine drawing, they yielded to the cravings of their own better natures, and found it indeed true that God is not very far from every one of us.

Expectation leads to preparation. The wise men prepared themselves for the service they were to render to the new-born King, not only by princely gifts, "gold, frankincense, and myrrh," but we may well believe also by that preparation of the heart, the "meek and quiet spirit" that is with God of great price.

And so we, too, who live in this day, when the last sands are about to leave the great hourglass of time, should be setting our spiritual houses in order, putting out of our lives every wrong thing, preparing our hearts, holding them ready for instant participation in the grand home-coming when the angels shall be sent forth to gather from the east and the west and the north and the south the faithful of all ages to sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven.

The gracious invitation is sounding: "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." And then he which testifieth these things, even our Lord himself, as though to lend wings to our sluggish faith, saith, "Surely I come quickly," while his prepared and hence waiting people, respond with joy, "Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Reader, what is your attitude toward this gracious invitation, attested by so many evidences of its genuineness, and which by this paper has now come within the circle of your life? "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." "Come; for all things are now ready."

MODERN INVENTIONS

The Signs of the Times

God the Revealer of Secrets

A BIBLE STUDY

1. How may the people of this world know beforehand the things that are coming upon the earth?

"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." Amos 3:7.

NOTE.—One hundred and twenty years before the flood, God revealed that coming event to Noah, and sent him, "a preacher of righteousness," to warn the world of its impending destruction. Every blow struck in building the ark was a warning message to the world. Jonah, also, was sent to Nineveh to warn the people of the coming judgment, unless they should repent. Thus, from the beginning, God has sent his prophets with messages of warning; and has hung out signs and wonders in the heavens and in the earth, that men might have opportunity to repent and turn to the Lord.

2. What sign had been foretold by the prophet Isaiah by which Christ, at his first advent, might be known as the Messiah?

"Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." Isa. 7:14. For fulfillment see Matt. 1:22, 23.

3. Where had the prophet said Christ should be born?

"But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Israel." Micah 5:2. For fulfillment see Matt. 2:1.

4. What prophet had foretold Christ's ride into Jerusalem?

"Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass." Zech. 9:9. For fulfillment, see Matt. 21:4, 5.

5. For what did Christ reprove the Pharisees and Sadducees?

"O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation." Luke 19:41-44.

7. What pitiful appeal did he make to the impenitent city?

"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" Matt. 23:37.

8. As he was about to leave the temple, what did he say?

"Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." Verse 38.

NOTE.—That which was to fill up the cup of their iniquity was their final rejection and crucifixion of Christ, and their condemnation and persecution of his apostles and people after his resurrection. See Matt. 23:29-35; John 19:15; Acts 4:8.

Our Lord's Great Prophecy

9. Hearing these words, what questions did the disciples ask?

"Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Matt. 24:3.

NOTE.—Christ's answers to these questions are worthy of the most careful study. The destruction of Jerusalem and the overthrow of the Jewish nation attending it are a type of the final destruction of all the cities of the world, and the overthrow of all nations. To some extent, therefore, the descriptions of the two great events seem to be blended. When Christ referred to the destruction of Jerusalem, his prophetic words reached beyond the event to the final conflagration when the Lord shall rise out of his place "to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity," and when the earth "shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her plain." Isaiah 26:21.

Thus the entire discourse was given, not for the early disciples only, but for those who were to live during the closing scenes of the world's history. During the discourse Christ did, however, give definite signs, both of the destruction of Jerusalem and of his second coming.

10. In his reply, how did Christ indicate that neither the end of the world nor of the Jewish nation was immediately at hand?

"Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many. And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet." Matt. 24:4-6.

11. What did Christ say of the wars, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes which were to precede these events?

"All these are the beginning of sorrows." Verse 8.

NOTE.—These were to precede and culminate in the great calamity and overthrow, first, of Jerusalem, and finally of the whole world, for, as already noted, the prophecy has a double application, first, to Jerusalem and the Jewish nation, and second, to the whole world; the destruction of Jerusalem for its rejection of Christ at his first advent being a type of the destruction of the world at the end for its rejection of Christ in refusing to heed the closing warning message sent by God to prepare the world for Christ's second advent.

12. In what language did Christ briefly describe the experiences of his people previous to these calamities?

"Then shall they deliver you up to be af-

AT HISTORIC WATERLOO—1815

The Chosen of God

EARTH, thou grain of sand on the shore of the universe of God; thou Bethlehem, amongst the princely cities of the heavens,—thou art, and remainest, the loved one amongst ten thousand sons and worlds, the chosen of God! Thee will he again visit, and then thou wilt prepare a throne for him, as thou gavest him a manger cradle; in his radiant glory wilt thou rejoice, as thou didst once drink his blood and his tears and mourn his death! On thee has the Lord a great work to complete!—A. J. Gordon.

of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" Matt. 16:3.

The Destruction of Jerusalem Foretold

6. In what words did Jesus foretell the destruction of Jerusalem?

"And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it, saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on dicted, and shall kill you: and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake. And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." Verses 9-12.

13. Who did he say would be saved? "But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." Verse 13.

The Gospel to All Nations

14. When did Christ say the end would come? "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Verse 14.

NOTE.—In 60 A. D. Paul carried the gospel to Rome, which was then the capital of the world. In A. D. 64 he wrote of the saints of "Caesar's household" (Phil. 4: 22); and the same year he says that the gospel had been "preached to every creature which is under heaven" (Col. 1: 23). Very soon after this (October, 66 A. D.) the Romans began their attacks against Jerusalem; and three and one-half years later the overthrow of the city and of the Jewish nation followed in the notable five months' siege under Titus, in the spring and summer of 70 A. D.

Thus it was respecting the end of the Jewish nation; and thus it will be in the end of the world as a whole. When the gospel, or good news, of Christ's coming kingdom has been preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, the end of the world—of all nations—will come. As the end of the Jewish nation came with overwhelming destruction, so will come the end of the world. Armageddon, the battle of the nations, will be fought, and the world will be swept with the besom of destruction under the seven last plagues.

Signs of the Destruction of Jerusalem

15. What sign did Christ mention by which his disciples might know when the destruction of Jerusalem was near?

"And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." Luke 21: 20.

16. When this sign appeared, what were the disciples to do?

"When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth, let him understand:) then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains." Matt. 24: 15, 16.

NOTE.—In October, 66 A. D., when Cestius came against the city, but for some unaccountable reason suddenly withdrew his army from it, the Christians discerned in this the sign foretold by Christ, and fled. After the departure of Cestius, Josephus, in his "Wars of the Jews," chapter 20, says that "many of the most eminent of the Jews swam away from the city, as from a ship when it is going to sink." It is a remarkable fact that in the terrible siege which occurred under Titus three and one-half years later, not a single Christian is known to have lost his life, while 1,100,000 Jews are said to have perished in it. Here is a most striking lesson on the value and importance of studying and believing the prophecies, and giving heed to the signs of the times. Those who believed what Christ had said, and watched for the sign which he had foretold, were saved, while the unbelieving perished. So it will be in the end of the world. The watchful and believing will be delivered, while the careless and unbelieving will be snared and taken. See Matt. 24: 36-44; Luke 21: 34-38; 1 Thess. 5: 1-6.

17. When the sign appeared, how suddenly were they to flee?

"Let him which is on his housetop not come down to take anything out of his house: neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes." Matt. 24: 17, 18.

A Period of Great Tribulation

18. What trying experience did Christ then foretell?

"For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." Verse 21.

NOTE.—In paragraph 4 of his preface to his "Wars of the Jews," Josephus, referring to the destruction of Jerusalem, says: "The misfortunes of all men, from the beginning of the world, if they be compared to these of the Jews, are not so considerable." In this terrible calamity, the prophecy of Moses recorded in Deut. 28: 47-53, was literally fulfilled. He said, "Thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body; the flesh of thy sons and of thy daughters, in the siege, and in the straits, wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee." For an account of the fulfillment of this, see Josephus's "Wars of the Jews," book 6, chap. 3, par. 4.

Following the destruction of Jerusalem came the persecution of the early Christians under the pagan emperors during the first three centuries of the Christian era, that began under Diocletian in 303 A. D., and continuing for ten years (Rev. 2: 10), being the most bitter and extensive persecution of God's people the world had yet witnessed. Following this came the still greater and more terrible persecution of the saints during the long centuries of papal supremacy, foretold in Dan. 7: 25 and Rev. 12: 6. All these tribulations occurred under either pagan or papal Rome.

19. For whose sake did Christ say the period of papal persecution would be shortened?

"And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Matt. 24: 22.

NOTE.—Through the influence of the Reformation of the sixteenth century, and the movements which grew out of it, the power of the Papacy to enforce its decrees against night was so intense that for a time no luminous body whatever appeared in the heavens, and a sheet of white paper could not be seen when held within a few inches of the eyes.

The Falling of the Stars

25. What sign was to follow the darkening of the sun and the moon? "And the stars shall fall from heaven." Matt. 24: 29.

"GO YE INTO ALL THE WORLD, AND PREACH THE GOSPEL TO EVERY CREATURE"

those it pronounced heretics was gradually lessened, until persecution ceased almost wholly about the middle of the eighteenth century—the beginning of an epoch of freedom.

Signs of Christ's Second Coming

20. Answering the question as to what would be the sign of his coming and the end of the world, what did Christ say?

"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Luke 21: 25, 26.

21. When were the first of these signs to appear, and what were they to be?

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven." Matt. 24: 29.

22. How is this expressed by Mark?

"But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." Mark 13: 24.

NOTE.—As already noted, papal persecution almost wholly ceased about the middle of the eighteenth century. Then, true to Christ's words, the signs of his coming at once began to appear, and before the 1260-year period of Dan. 7: 25, Rev. 12: 6, 14, and Rev. 13: 5, allotted to papal persecution, had closed.

The Darkening of the Sun

23. When was there a wonderful darkening of the sun? Ans.—On May 19, 1780.

NOTE.—May 19, 1780, is known in history as "the dark day." On this day over a large portion of the New World, upon which 26. When did the stars fall, as here predicted? Ans.—Nov. 13, 1833.

NOTE.—On the morning of Nov. 13, 1833, there occurred the most wonderful exhibition of shooting stars the world has ever seen. Those who witnessed it, says Professor Olmsted, the celebrated astronomer of Yale College, "probably saw the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the pages of history." The extent of this shower, he says, "was such as to cover no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface." And, like the darkening of the sun and moon, it was considered by many who saw it as "the harbinger of the coming of the Son of man."

Signs Upon the Earth

27. What were to be the signs on earth of Christ's coming?

"And upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Luke 21: 25, 26.

NOTE.—This is an exact picture of things in the world today. Through greed of gain, lawlessness, licentiousness, increasing violence, trouble between capital and labor, international complications, and preparations for war, the nations are perplexed, and men's hearts tremble with fear as they look into the future. The elements are also disturbed, as seen in great earthquakes and storms on land and sea.

28. What is predicted of the moral condition of the world in the last days?

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, "And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Luke 21: 27. See Matt. 24: 30.

31. When these things should begin to come to pass, what did Christ tell his people to do?

"And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Luke 21: 28.

The Certainty of These Things

32. When the trees put forth their leaves, what do we know?

"Now learn a parable of the fig tree; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh." Matt. 24: 32.

33. What may we know with equal certainty when these signs have been seen?

"So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors." Verse 33. "So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke 21: 31.

34. What did Christ say of the certainty of this prophecy?

"Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Matt. 24: 34, 35.

Be Ready to Meet Him

35. Who alone knows the exact day of Christ's coming?

"But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." Verse 36.

36. What did Christ say would be the moral condition of the world just preceding his advent?

"But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Verses 37-39.

37. In view of the fact that we do not know the exact time of Christ's coming, what important admonition has he given us?

"Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Verse 44.

38. What will be the experience of those who say in their hearts that the Lord is not soon coming?

"But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him off asunder [margin, "cut him off"], and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Verses 48-51.

39. What will God's faithful servants be doing at this time?

"Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season?" Verse 45.

NOTE.—The "meat in due season" here spoken of evidently refers to the proclamation of the message based upon the signs which indicate the near approach of the Lord. The preaching of this message is what causes scoffers mockingly to ask, "Where is the promise of his coming?"

"The World's Crisis." This new book answers from a prophetic standpoint the world's universal question: "What is the meaning of these things, and how and when are we drifting?" 128 pages; paper cover printed in two colors; profusely illustrated; price, 25 cents, postpaid.

THE BEREAN LIBRARY

ALL who desire to study further the important Bible subjects presented in this series of Extras should order from this list of valuable books put up in paper covers, postpaid, at the following very low prices:—

Steps to Christ, 144 pages.....	$.25
Thoughts on Daniel, 345 pages.....	.25
Thoughts on Revelation, 430 pages.....	.35
His Glorious Appearing, 124 pages.....	.15
The Sabbath in the Scriptures, 216 pages.....	.25
The Sabbath in History, 600 pages.....	.50
Capital and Labor, 208 pages.....	.25
Here and Hereafter, 360 pages.....	.25
Bible Footlights, 320 pages.....	.35
Our Paradise Home, 128 pages.....	.15
Religious Liberty in America, 448 pages.....	.35
The Coming King, 320 pages.....	.50

Order from the publishers, whose address is given below

THE ADVENT REVIEW AND SABBATH HERALD

MAY 10, 1915

ISSUED EACH THURSDAY BY THE
Review & Herald Publishing Association
Takoma Park, Washington, D. C.

Terms in Advance
One Year.....$2.00 Six Months.....$1.00
Three Months.....$.50

[Entered as second-class matter, August 14, 1903, at the post office at Washington, D. C., under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.]

CHRIST COMING IN GLORY

at this time the eyes of all the world were centered, there occurred, at midday, a remarkable darkness. "Candles were lighted in many houses. The birds were silent and disappeared. The fowls retired to roost." In harmony with the impression God evidently designed should be made by the sign, many thought the day of judgment was at hand.

The Darkening of the Moon

24. When did the moon refuse to give her light?

The night following the darkening of the sun, May 19, 1780.

NOTE.—Although the moon had fulfilled only the night before, the darkness of this proud, blasphemers, . . . lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." 2 Tim. 3: 1-5.

29. How did the apostle Peter say the message of the Lord's coming would be treated by some?

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." 2 Peter 3: 3, 4.

The Next Great Event

30. What did Christ say was to be the next great event following these signs?

church, or because some minister in whom we have confidence has taught us, but because we know for ourselves what the Word of the Lord teaches. In this way only can be obtained that knowledge of the Word of God, that experience in him, which will establish us in the present truths for this time, and enable us to stand in the evil day.

Says the servant of the Lord, "None but those who have trained the intellect to grasp the truths of the Bible will stand through the last great conflict." Now is our day of opportunity to secure this training. Let us improve it.

F. M. W.

Signs of the Approaching End

Part 2. The Coming of the Latter Days

HAVING foretold the destruction of Jerusalem, and given to the believers signs by which they might find deliverance in the day of its overthrow, Christ yet more fully answered the second part of the disciples' question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Matt. 24:3.

The Period of Papal Persecutions

Quickly he passed to the events of the latter days. But first he sketched, in few words, the tribulations through which his church was to pass during the intervening centuries. Daniel the prophet had written of this experience, foretelling the long prophetic period during which the papal power was to "wear out the saints of the Most High." Dan. 7:25. Of these times, Christ said in his prophetic discourse:—

"Then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Matt. 24:21, 22.

It is evident that Christ referred to the same time of tribulation foretold by Daniel. His words could not refer to the trials attending the flight of the Christians from Jerusalem. Their flight was a deliverance of the elect from trial, however much the weak may have suffered temporarily in fleeing from their homes. The great suffering of that time came upon the unbelieving. They had no shelter.

This prophecy of our Saviour's presents the picture of long-continued persecution of his own elect, and foretells the shortening of the allotted time. God was to intervene in some special way to save his people. Even so the elect suffered through the centuries of papal supremacy, until the rise of the Reformation and the spreading abroad of God's Word broke the power of the Papacy, shortening the days of their bitter tribulation.

The End Drawing Near

According to Daniel's further prophecy, the period of trial and tribulation was to reach "even to the time of the end." Dan. 11:35. Naturally, then, we should look for the signs of the latter days to begin to appear following these days of tribulation. And, sure enough, the next words of Christ's discourse introduce the topic of Christ's second coming. The prophetic outline has now to deal with events leading on to the end of the age.

First the Saviour utters a warning against false ideas concerning his second coming. That no theories of a secret coming or of a mystic coming might deceive the unwary, he says in plain words:—

"Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before. Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt. 24:23-27.

We see the need of the warning today. Some of the most subtle deceptions are found in the teaching that Christ has already come, secretly; or that he comes in the chamber of death or in the spiritualistic séance. Against all these errors we are forewarned, as well as against any agencies that may come showing even marvelous signs and wonders. The close of human probation, the coming of the day of God, will be as a thief in the night; and Christ's coming itself will overtake the unwatchful all unprepared. But when he comes, "every eye shall see him," and all the glory of heaven will burst upon the quaking world.

Signs in the Heavens and the Earth

Now the Saviour's outline of prophecy presents the signs to show when the coming of the Lord is drawing near. Referring again to the days of tribulation foretold by the prophet, Christ says:—

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven." Matt. 24:29, 30.

In Luke's record of the same prophetic discourse, additional signs are given, describing conditions in the earth as Christ's coming draws near. His account reads:—

"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Luke 21:25-28.

Yet again, the prophet John, in the Revelation, foretells these signs in the sun and moon and stars, as they were shown to him in a vision of the last days. But his record shows that this series of signs was to be preceded by a great earthquake. He describes the order of events as follows:—

"And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." Rev. 6:12.

In these scriptures four great signs of Christ's approaching advent are listed for our study, as follows:—

1. The great earthquake.
2. The darkening of the sun and moon.
3. The falling of the stars.
4. Distress of nations, and other signs.

The Time When the Signs Begin

Christ's prophecy points out approximately the time when the first of the signs that he gave, the darkening of the sun, should appear—"Immediately after the tribulation of those days." And the "great earthquake" of John's vision, was to precede this sign in the heavens.

The Reformation of the sixteenth century began to cut short the days of tribulation. But some countries shut out the liberalizing influences of the Word of God. There persecution continued.

Even as late as near the end of the seventeenth century, in 1685, France revoked the Edict of Nantes, that had granted toleration, and persecution raged as of old. The church was driven again to the desert. Speaking of the early decades of the eighteenth century, Kurz says:—

In France the persecution of the Huguenots continued. . . . The "pastors of the desert" performed their duties at the risk of their lives.—Church History, Vol. III, page 88.

There was severe persecution of the Moravians, in Austria, in these times, many of the persecuted finding refuge in Saxony. It was in 1722 that Christian David led the first band of Moravian refugees to settle on the estates of Count Zinzendorf, who organized through them the great pioneer movement of modern missions.

But by the middle of the century, the era of enlightenment and the force of world opinion, in the good providence of God, had so permeated the Catholic states of Europe that general violent persecution had ceased.

One incident suffices as evidence of this. The scene was in France, where alone, of all the Catholic states, there were any great numbers of Protestants. In 1762 a Huguenot was put to torture on the rack by the authorities of Toulouse, under the influence of the Dominicans. Voltaire took up the matter, and so wrought upon public opinion that the Paris parliament reviewed the case, and the king paid the persecuted man a large indemnity.

This shows that about the middle of that century, the days of any general persecution had ceased. In the nature of the case, we may not point to the exact year, and say, Here the days of tribulation ended.

From these times, then, we are to scan the record of history to learn if the appointed signs began to appear. As we look, we find the following events recorded, following on in the order predicted:—

1. The Lisbon earthquake, of 1755.
2. The "dark day," of 1780.
3. The falling stars, of 1833.
4. General conditions and movements betokening the end.

"There shall be signs," the Saviour said. We are to study the record of events, watching to catch the signs of the approaching end as earnestly as the mariner watches the beacon lights as he nears the longed-for haven on a dark and stormy night.

W. A. S.

The Social Volcano

WE consider it nothing strange that the forces of nature, among which the motions of a certain antagonism have been operating for many centuries, should occasionally burst the crust of this world and scatter devastation and death broadcast. That is a material volcano. In it is demonstrated the antagonistic operation of natural forces, blind forces, shunted off the main line of the Creator's purpose as the outworking of the anarchy of sin, which has affected the material as well as the social system.

Satan claims the sovereignty of this world; but his system is founded upon self-service, jealousy, and hatred. Every calamity that has befallen the race and the world which it inhabits has come as a result of accepting Satan's program instead of God's. When Satan defied the government of God in heaven and set himself against it and established himself in this earth, he set at defiance God's government in material as well as social and spiritual things. From that day there has been trouble in the temporal and material affairs of this world as well as in the social and spiritual affairs. Calamity has followed on calamity, disaster on disaster, and famine, pestilence, and death have been close on the heels of the human family through all the centuries that have passed. Mountains have blown their heads off and overwhelmed the people. Earthquakes have shaken down the dwellings of the rich and the poor, and buried the inmates in the ruins. Fires, floods, and tornadoes have swept over the world and left desolation, ruin, and death in their path. These demonstrate antagonism in the domain of material nature—the laws of nature to a certain extent counterworked by another power that has been given scope to demonstrate itself.

For years scientists have noted a marked tendency toward the increase of those occurrences which demonstrate this condition of antagonism among the laws of nature. Earthquakes are more numerous, the earth's crust more "nervous" and treacherous, symptoms of an impending terrestrial calamity.

Exactly the same condition has been noted in the social system. The social fabric has also become more "nervous," more treacherous: The formation of organizations antagonistic to each other and threatening each other, and occasionally clashing with each other and declaring each other's extinction, is symptomatic of the same dangerous condition in the social world that we have observed in the material world. This clashing of interests has shown no abatement in its insistent aggressiveness. The interests of one organization have clashed with those of another, and the compromises effected between them have been the compromises of expediency, and all know them to be but makeshifts and temporality in their tenure.

What we have seen among organizations within the nations we have seen growing with equal aggressiveness and insistence between the greater organizations—the nations of the world. They assumed monstrous burdens to keep other nations from breaking down their national boundaries and spoiling them of their possessions; and while arming for their own defense, they have made themselves dreaded by others, who have likewise armed for defense, and have thus passed on the spirit of dread and distrust and aggressive defense.

These were the smoldering fires, the subterranean rumblings, that forewarned of the volcanic outbreak so soon to be. The strain upon the social earth crust became greater than the resisting strength of the material, and the crash has come; the social volcanic mountains have blown their heads into the air, and destruction and death are raining down upon the people. This is the greatest social outbreak the world has ever seen. Every international upheaval of the past has made this one more certain, more deadly in its workings, and more provocative of that bitterness which will yet fling the whole world into one field of carnage.

This crash has set the "peace propagandists" at work more eagerly than ever before. We admire the spirit which actuates them—that is, their desire to see peace reign in this world, to see the afflictions of war stayed, and the flow of blood stanchied. But God has given us no ground of hope that peace will ever reign here until the work of the gospel has been consummated, and every vestige of sin has been burned out of this world by the renovating fires of the last great day. Much as we oppose war and deplore the spirit of hatred which nerves men to incite nation against nation, we feel that it is worse than a waste of time to prophesy the age of peace this side the second coming of Christ. It raises hopes which will never be fulfilled, and encourages men to trust in human means of achieving peace, when there is no peace for those outside of Christ.

We find no scripture which warrants us in believing that mankind will grow better and better, more careful of one another's rights, more tender of one another's feelings. On the other hand, we are positively instructed that "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." The greatest deception that will come to this world will be that which will be found in a false peace movement. A human arrangement will undoubtedly be perfected which will cause the majority of Christendom to feel that now the victory of peace is complete, that the battle against war has been fought and won, and that the kingdom of righteousness has at last been ushered in. And then the crash will come. A world satisfied and at ease and resting in the confidence of peace accomplished, will become a world disappointed and distressed, and terrified at the fearful reality of a world engulfed in the horrors of most bitter warfare. The awfulness of the present war is tempered somewhat by the fact that some of the nations are still neutral; that there is comparative peace in a portion of the world; that there are states which can act as mediators between the warring nations; but when the greater war is on, the wounds of civilization cannot be mollified even to that extent. The present social volcano is sufficiently terrorizing the world; but when every nation is drinking its cup of distress, the people will realize the bitterness of the deception bound up in the present peace propaganda.

In a world war is demonstrated the final result of the principles of Satan's rule applied to the dealings of man with man. That social volcano was germinant in Satan's conquest in Eden as truly as

Let us not forget the prerequisites of being numbered among God's jewels. They are the guileless mouth, the guileless heart, the choice of righteousness, the appropriation of Christ's sacrifice and work in our behalf. The fountain must be pure if the stream is to be pure. The choice of righteousness must spring from a heart that loves righteousness. The guileless mouth can be possessed only by him who has a guileless heart. The life of the accepted child of God will be a continued testimony to the goodness and the righteousness of God, a wellspring of hope, and a savor of life unto life.

C. M. S.

Signs of the Approaching End

Part 4. "The Dark Day" of 1780

WE recall that in the vision of latter-day signs given to the prophet John, he saw the "great earthquake" followed by a sign in the heavens:—

"And the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood." Rev. 6: 12.

Of this event our Saviour spoke, in giving the signs of his second coming which were to begin to appear following the cutting short of the days of persecution. We repeat his words:—

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." Matt. 24: 29.

The Prophecy Fulfilled

True to the order of the prophecy, following the great earthquake of 1755, in Europe, there came, in America, the second sign of the approaching end, the wonderful darkening of the sun, known in history as "The Dark Day," of May 19, 1780.

This sign appeared at the time indicated in the prophecy, "immediately after the tribulation of those days." The sun was darkened, and the moon did not give her light. Whatever explanation men may have to offer as to the cause of the phenomenon, the fact remains that when the time of the prophecy came, the sign appeared.

The story of that remarkable day has been often told in poetry and prose, few, perhaps, seeing in it the sign that it was, though many at the time felt that it was a token of the approach of the last days.

The poet Whittier commemorated it in the poem of "Abraham Davenport":—

"'Twas on a May day of the far old year
Seventeen hundred eighty, that there fell Over the bloom and sweet life of the spring,
Over the fresh earth and the heaven of
noon,
A horror of great darkness."

"Birds ceased to sing, and all the barnyard fowls
Roosted; the cattle at the pasture bars

Lowed, and looked homeward; bats on leathern wings
Flitted abroad; the sounds of labor died;
Men prayed, and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom blast of the trumpet shatter
The black sky."

The words of the poet are substantiated by the plain prose of the dictionary maker. In the department explanatory of "Noted Names," Webster's Unabridged Dictionary (edition 1883) says:—

The dark day, May 19, 1780 — so called on account of a remarkable darkness on that day extending over all New England. . . . The obscuration began about ten o'clock in the morning, and continued till the middle of the next night, but with difference of degree and duration in different places. . . . The true cause of this remarkable phenomenon is not known.

Cause Unknown

Further than this last statement no one has been able to go in assigning a cause. At the time, some explained it as due to smoke from forest fires, others to the exceptional rise of vapors and atmospheric dust in the warm spring following the melting of unusually heavy winter snows. But no forest fires before or since ever produced such a phenomenon, and no melting snows or vapors before or since ever had such an effect over a vast area, a region, too, which has never known obscuration of the sun by such fogs as sometimes darken the sky over the limited area of London's smoking chimneys.

The facts are fully covered by the dictionary's statement: "The true cause of this remarkable phenomenon is not known."

What we do know is that the Saviour's prophecy declared, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." And when the time for it came, the sign appeared.

Contemporary Records

Though the comparatively small-sized newspapers of the day were crowded with news of the progress of the Revolutionary War, then raging, no little space was given to reports and discussions of the remarkable darkening of the sun.

A correspondent of the Boston Gazette and Country Journal (of May 29, 1780) reported observations made at Ipswich Hamlet (Mass.), "by several gentlemen of liberal education":—

About eleven o'clock the darkness was such as to demand our attention, and put us upon making observations. At half past eleven, in a room with three windows, twenty-four panes each, all open toward the southeast and south, large print could not be read by persons with good eyes. About twelve o'clock the windows being still open, a candle cast a shade so well defined on the wall as that profiles were taken with as much ease as they could have been at night.

About one o'clock a glint of light which had continued to this time in the east, shut in, and the darkness was greater than had been for any time before. . . . We dined about two, the windows all open, and two candles burning on the table.

In the time of greatest darkness some of the fowls went to their roost. Cocks crowed in answer to one another as they commonly do in the night. Woodcocks, which are night birds, whistled as they do only in the dark. Frogs peeped. In short, there was the appearance of mid-night at noonday.

About three o'clock the light in the west increased, the motion of the clouds became more quick, their color higher and more brassy than at any time before. There appeared to be quick flashes or coruscations, not unlike the aurora borealis. . . . About half past four, our company, which had passed an unexpected night very cheerfully together, broke up.

Of the evening following, this writer (then at Salem) wrote:—

Perhaps it never was darker since the children of Israel left the house of bondage. This gross darkness held till about one o'clock, although the moon had fulfilled but the day before.

The Boston Independent Chronicle (of June 8) quoted from Thomas's Massachusetts Spy:—

During the whole time a sickly, melancholy gloom overcast the face of nature. Nor was the darkness of the night less uncommon and terrifying than that of the day; notwithstanding there was almost a full moon, no object was discernible, but by the help of some artificial light, which when seen from the neighboring houses and other places at a distance, appeared through a kind of Egyptian darkness, which seemed almost impervious to the rays. This unusual phenomenon excited the fears and apprehensions of many people. Some considered it as a portentous omen of the wrath of Heaven in vengeance denounced against the land, others as the immediate harbinger of the last day, when "the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light."

W. A. S.

(To be concluded)

Manchuria—Our Newest Mission Field in the Far East

THE readers of the REVIEW have been glad, I am sure, to learn of our advance into the Manchurian Mission field. Brother Bernhard Petersen and wife and Brother O. J. Grundset and wife reached Mukden, the capital of Manchuria, in October, 1914. They are the only American missionaries who have settled in Manchuria. The first missionaries to this country were the Roman Catholics, who began work here in 1838. The Presbyterians came in 1869, the Scotch Presbyterians in 1872, and the Danish Mission in 1895. The three Protestant societies have united their interests and endeavors, so they are practically one, and are known as the Presbyterian Society. The Seventh-day Adventist Misbrokenness of spirit he gathered courage to tell his wife about it, and she, too, laid hold of the blessed hope. Now they are able to sing from the heart,—

"Blest be the sorrow, kind the storm,
That drives us nearer home."

When all our hearts were too full for utterance, as we rejoiced in the blessing of the Lord and the presence of his tender Spirit, the brother said, "We cry, but we are happy."

Through all kinds of experiences, over all manner of paths, and in the most remote corners of the earth, the Lord is calling his children home. W. A. S.

Kafirland.

The Bible Sabbath

THE discussion over the rest day for the human family is becoming world-wide. This is indicated in the agitation over the question of the national rest day in our State legislatures and national Congress, and in the space devoted to the consideration of the question in the various church assemblies and religious journals. Which day should be observed as the Sabbath of the Lord? Taking the Word of God as a guide, this is a question which admits of but one answer. Many reasons might be given from the Scriptures of Truth as to why the seventh day only should be regarded as the Sabbath of the Lord. The following considerations afford sufficient basis for this conclusion:—

1. The seventh-day Sabbath is the Lord's day. "Therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath." Mark 2:28. The Sabbath became the Lord's day by virtue of his great creative act. Jesus Christ is declared in the Scriptures of Truth to be the Creator of all things. See Col. 1:15-18; John 1:1-3. After he had finished his labor in the creation of this world, and pronounced everything that he had made good, he chose one day out of the weekly cycle and set it apart as a memorial of his creative work. By three distinct acts this memorial was established. These three acts are recorded in Gen. 2:1-3. "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." (a) God rested on the seventh day. This constituted the seventh day his rest day; (b) God blessed the seventh day. His blessing upon it made it holy time; (c) after resting on the day and making it holy time, he then sanctified it and set it apart for the human family. Thus our Saviour declares in Mark 2:27, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." This creation of the Sabbath constituted the Lord Jesus Christ its Lord.

2. The Sabbath commandment was made a part of the great moral law. Ex. 20:8-11. The Creator descended upon Mt. Sinai, and with the greatest display of celestial glory which the world ever beheld, he spoke with his own voice these great ten words. In the very bosom of this law, buttressed before and behind by the other commandments, as if to guard it from the attacks of the fallen one, the Sabbath commandment was placed. This commandment, with the other nine, was written with the finger of God on tables of stone, an implication of its enduring nature. This law, including the Sabbath commandment, is of perpetual obligation upon the children of God in all ages.

3. The Lord constituted the Sabbath institution a sign between him and Israel forever. Ex. 31:13-18. The term Israel applies not only to God's people of the Jewish race, but to his children in all ages. Rom. 2:28, 29; Gal. 3:29. The Sabbath was therefore made a sign of sanctification between God and his children in all ages of the church.

4. Christ not only created the Sabbath and thus became its Lord, but during his earthly ministry became man's example in Sabbath observance. Read Luke 4:16; Matt. 12:1-12.

5. The Sabbath was observed not only by Jesus Christ, but by his disciples of the early church as well. After his death, those who were most intimately associated with him prepared spices and ointments on the sixth day; but the Sabbath drawing on, the record states that they left off their work and "rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment." Luke 23:56. On the first day of the week they did the work which they would not do on the Sabbath. Luke 24:21.

6. The great apostle to the Gentiles also observed the Sabbath of the Lord. It was customary for him to make this his regular day of public worship. Acts 17:1-3; 18:4, 11.

7. Finally, the Sabbath of the Lord, that same institution which was instituted in Eden before man sinned, will be observed in the future state when Eden is restored. Isa. 66:22, 23. Thus the original purpose of God with respect to his holy day will be carried out. He designed that the Sabbath should be kept by a holy nation, giving it to Adam in his innocence. Sin came in and perverted the truth of God and turned aside for a little time God's purpose. While sin may apparently delay the action of God's plans, it can never defeat them. The arrow of God's truth will reach the mark at last. Every purpose of God will carry through the eternal ages. Thus the Sabbath, like a golden arch, spans the abyss of sin and reaches from Paradise in the beginning to Paradise restored. Through the Scriptures of Truth it is recognized emphatically as a Christian institution, and as Christians we should observe the day which the Lord has made holy, and rejoice therein.

F. M. W.

Signs of the Approaching End

Part 4. "The Dark Day" of 1780

(Concluded)

Not only over the land but out at sea also the unnatural darkness of the day and night of May 19, 1780, was observed.

In the Boston Independent Chronicle (of June 15) a correspondent, telling of interviews with various observers, wrote:—

I have also seen a very sensible captain of a vessel who was that morning about forty leagues southeast of Boston. He says the cloud which appeared at the west was the blackest he ever saw. About eleven o'clock there was a little rain, and it grew dark. Between one and two he was obliged to light a large candle to steer by. . . . Between nine and ten at night, he ordered his men to take in some of the sails, but it was so dark they could not find the way from one mast to the other.

Thoughts Turned to the Judgment

This writer commented as follows concerning the feelings awakened by the event:—

Various have been the sentiments of people concerning the designs of Providence in spreading the unusual darkness over us. Some suppose it portentous of the last scene. I wish it may have some good effect on the minds of the wicked, and that they may be excited to prepare for that solemn day.

The Independent Chronicle (of June 22) printed a letter from Dr. Samuel Stearns, who had been appealed to because of his knowledge "in philosophy and astronomy." First of all he disposed of one suggestion that had been made:—

That the darkness was not caused by an eclipse is manifest by the various positions of the planets of our system at that time; for the moon was more than 150 degrees from the sun all that day.

Then, in the rather heavy language of the science of that period, this writer told how the action of the sun's heat was continually projecting into the atmosphere particles of earthy matter; and in his opinion it was some "vast collection of such particles that caused the late uncommon darkness." But as to the real accounting for the phenomenon he wrote:—

The primary cause must be imputed to Him that walketh through the circuit of heaven, who stretcheth out the heaven like a curtain, who maketh the clouds his chariot, who walketh upon the wings of the wind. It was he at whose voice the stormy winds are obedient, that commanded these exhalations to be collected and condensed together, that with them he might darken both the day and the night; which darkness was, perhaps, not only a token of his indignation against the crying iniquities and abominations of the people, but an omen of some future destruction.

JULY 15, 1915 THE ADVENT REVIEW AND EDUCATOR

Thus men's minds were exercised by this sign "in the sun, and in the moon." The early records of New York City tell of the interest excited there, though evidently the darkness was not so marked as farther north.

In the Connecticut Legislature

The Connecticut Legislature was in session when the supernatural darkness came on. The following extract from the Journal of the house for May 19, 1780, tells the story:—

A solemn gloom or unusual darkness before ten o'clock—a still darker cloud rolling under the sable curtain from the north and west before eleven o'clock—excluded the light so that none could see to read or to write in the house, even at either window, or distinguish persons at a small distance, or perceive any distinction of dress in the circle of attendants; wherefore, at eleven o'clock adjourned the house till two in the afternoon.

On the proposition to adjourn, in the senate, we are told, one member, Abraham Davenport, arose in his place and said:—

Mr. Speaker, it is either the day of judgment, or it is not. If it is not, there is no need of adjourning. If it is, I desire to be found doing my duty. I move that candles be brought, and that we proceed to business.—"History of the Town of Antrim, New Hampshire," by Rev. W. R. Cochrane, 1880, pages 58, 59.

It was this striking incident that Whittier described with the poet's pen:—

"Meanwhile in the old Statehouse, dim as ghosts,
Sat the lawgivers of Connecticut,
Trembling beneath their legislative robes.
'It is the Lord's great day! Let us adjourn.'
Some said; and then, as if with one accord,
All eyes were turned to Abraham Davenport.
He rose, slow cleaving with his stately voice
The intolerable hush. 'This well may be
The day of judgment which the world awaits;
But be it so or not, I only know
My present duty, and my Lord's command
To occupy till he come. So at the post
Where he hath set me in his providence
I choose, for one, to meet him face to face,—
No faithless servant frightened from my task,
But ready when the Lord of the harvest calls;
And therefore, with all reverence, I would say,
Let God do his work, we will see to ours.
Bring in the candles.'"

Thus, in a manner that arrested the attention of men and put awe and solemnity into their hearts, with thoughts of the coming of the great day of God, the first of the predicted signs in the heavens was revealed.

It was more general at a later time—when students of the Bible seemed moved upon simultaneously, in both Europe and America, to give attention to the doctrine of Christ's second coming—that these signs were seen to have come in fulfillment of the prophecy.

As we look to the past, we see how truly the tokens of the coming King began to appear as the church of Christ came fully out from the long, dark period of tribulation. A new era was at the dawn, in which the Lord was to fill the earth with light before his second appearing, according to his word to Daniel the prophet:—

"But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Dan. 12:4.

At last the time of the end was at hand, and the signs of the latter days began to appear in the earth and in the heavens. The Lord was preparing to send to all the world the closing gospel message of Christ's soon coming in glory.

W. A. S.

A Visit to Japan

As Brethren Fulton and Johanson had consented to comply with the earnest request given them to attend the workers' meeting and biennial conference of the Asiatic Division Mission to be held at Shanghai, May 1-14, they joined Elder Porter, Professor Salisbury, and me on our return to China. At Hongkong, Professor Salisbury left us, to return to his work in India. Personally, I felt this separation very much. It had been five months since Brother Salisbury met me on my arrival in India. He had traveled with me over his large field, acquainting me with its conditions and needs, and counseling with me regarding various plans for the more rapid advancement of the work. These associations in gospel work bind hearts together in strong, close bonds of brotherhood. I shall ever remember with pleasure this visit to India.

From Hongkong, our company journeyed north to Japan, spending one day at Shanghai on the way. As soon as we could get ashore, we were bundled into jinrikishas and hurried out to our mission compound, the headquarters of the Asiatic Division. Here we had the pleasure of meeting a large number of former acquaintances and fellow workers,—Sister Porter, the Drs. Selmon, Brother and Sister Woodward and their daughter Mary. Brother and Sister Gillis, Brother and Sister Wood, Brother and Sister Blunden, Sister Shull, Sister Hall, and Brother and Sister Stafford.

Dr. Selmon gathered the students in the chapel that we might meet them all together, and speak a few words of greeting. Time did not permit of anything like a close inspection of our buildings and facilities at this headquarters; a closer examination will be made on our return to the conference, but the general appearance seems good.

Our first sight of Japan was at Nagasaki, which presented a beautiful view. We were met here by our Japanese minister, Elder Kuniya, and a number of Sabbath keepers living in the city. Word from Elder DeVinney, superintendent of the Japan Mission, made it seem best for Elder Porter to leave our boat and hasten on by train to Tokio. Our ride through the Inland Sea, of Japan, must be placed among the most interesting and beautiful sea voyages we have ever made. Hundreds of beautiful islands, covered with dark-green foliage, rise from the water in every direction.

At Kobe, Dr. Noma and her sanitarium family came onto our boat to give us a warm Japanese welcome to their city and country. Here I left the boat; and after an hour's visit at the sanitarium, Elder Kuniya and I hurried on by train to Tokio.

Once more we were made glad by the sight and the handshake of fellow workers, who had been together some days attending a workers' meeting. After a long effort, our brethren in Japan have succeeded in securing a block of land in a suburb of Tokio, where they have erected good buildings for their headquarters. They have a neat, well-planned printing house, a good school building, and a number of residences for those whose duties make it necessary for them to live at the headquarters. They ought to have more land, but on account of prices they purchased only what they actually need for their buildings.

It gave me pleasure to meet our Japanese workers. Elder Okohira is located at headquarters, doing editorial and school work. Elder Kuniya is located at Kobe, and is doing evangelistic work in different parts of the kingdom. These are earnest, loyal men of good influence in Japan, and their wives are fully united with them in their work. In the printing office, the school, and also in the field work, we have promising young men helping to advance the cause in their native land: and this is what I find in every country I visit. God is raising up efficient, reliable, consecrated men and women wherever his cause is established, to join in quickly finishing his work throughout the world.

It is a remarkable and significant fact that as soon as people in these lands accept the third angel's message, a great dinary version (King James) gives "a facts of the whole narrative and the living soul" in the margin of Gen. 1:30, as showing the same expression used of all the animal creation in the inspired Hebrew text. The famous Methodist commentator, Dr. Adam Clarke, says on this phrase, "living soul:"—

"A general term to express all creatures endued with animal life, in any of its infinitely varied gradations."

2. Are "Soul" and "Spirit" Deathless?

"But are not the soul and spirit said to be deathless?" questions another. No. One writer says of the Scriptural use of the words "soul" and "spirit:"—

"The Hebrew and Greek words from which they are translated, occur in the Bible, as we have seen, seventeen hundred times. Surely, once at least in that long list we shall be told that the soul is immortal, if this is its high prerogative. Seventeen hundred times we inquire if the soul is once said to be immortal, or the spirit deathless. And the invariable and overwhelming response we meet is, Not once!"—"Here and Hereafter," by U. Smith, p. 65.

On the contrary, the Lord declares, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Eze. 18:20. It means that the person that sins shall die; for soul, mind, heart, spirit, are used to express life or the seat of the affections or of the intellect. One may commend his soul to God, or his spirit to God (really his life to the keeping of God), until the great day of the resurrection. The word "soul" is used for all animal life in New Testament usage as well as in the Old; as, "And every living soul died in the sea." Rev. 16:3.

3. The Thief on the Cross.

But did not Christ promise the thief on the cross that he would be with him that day in Paradise?—No; for Paradise is where God's throne is, and the tree of life, and the city of God, the capital of Christ's kingdom; and three days later Christ had not yet ascended to the Father. "Touch me not," he said to Mary after his resurrection; "for I am not yet ascended to my Father." John 20:17. The dying thief, therefore, was not with him in Paradise three days before. Nor did the thief's question suggest such a thought. His faith grasped Christ's resurrection, the resurrection of his children, and the coming kingdom; and that day on the cross, in the moment of the deepest humiliation of the Son of God, the repentant sinner cried, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." And the Saviour replied, "Verily I say unto thee today"—this day, when the world scoffs and the darkness presses upon me, this day I say it—"shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Luke 23:42, 43. The punctuation that makes it read, "Today shalt thou be with me in Paradise," is not a part of the sacred text, and puts the Saviour's promise in contradiction with the teaching of Scripture.

4. The Rich Man and Lazarus.

"Then there is the parable of the rich man and Lazarus," one says, "where Lazarus and Dives are talking, though dead—Lazarus in Abraham's bosom and the rich man in torment." But that is a parable; and no one can set the figures of a parable against the facts of positive Scripture. In parables, lessons are often taught by figurative language and imaginary scenes which could never be real, though the lesson is emphasized the more forcefully. In the parable of Judges 9, the trees are represented as holding a council and talking with one another. No one mistakes the lesson of the parable or supposes that the trees actually talked. So in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, the lesson is taught that uprightness in this life, even though with deepest poverty, will be rewarded in the future life; while uncharitable selfishness will surely bring one to ruin and destruction. In the face of the Bible teaching, no one can turn this parable into actual narrative, representing that the saved in glory are now looking over the battlements of heaven and talking with the lost amid the flames. This is not the picture that the Scriptures give us of heaven, nor of the state of the dead, nor of the time and circumstances of the final rewards or punishments.

W. A. S.

Signs of Christ's Coming—No. 2

The Dark Day of 1780

THE time of the dark day which was to be a sign of Christ's coming is given by Matthew as "immediately after the tribulation of those days." A description of those days of persecution and their shortening for the elect's sake, had been given in the preceding verses, in these words:—

"Then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Matt. 24:21, 22.

We are then to look for the occurrence of a dark day soon after the influence of the German Reformation and the French Revolution had wrought such religious and civil changes throughout Europe that the power of the Papacy to persecute heretics in any country was practically gone.

The prophet Isaiah, in his description of this same sign, pointed out the time of day when the darkening was to occur:—

"Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it. For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine." Isa. 13:9, 10.

The fulfilment corresponded with remarkable exactness to the prophecy. We quote from memoirs written and published within five years of the event:—

"The time of the extraordinary darkness was May 19, 1780. It came on between the hours of 10 and 11 A. M., and continued until the middle of the next night, but with different appearance at different places. As to the manner of its approach it seemed to appear first of all in the southwest. The wind came from that quarter, and the darkness appeared to come on with the clouds that came in that direction. The degree to which the darkness arose was different in different places. In most parts of the country it was so great that people were unable to read common print, determine the time of the day by their clocks or watches, dine, or manage their domestic business, without the light of candles. In some places the darkness was so great that persons could not see to read common print in the open air, for several hours together; but I believe this was not generally the case. The extent of this darkness was remarkable. Our intelligence in this respect is not so particular as I could wish; but from the accounts that have been received it seems to have extended all over the New England States. It was observed as far east as Falmouth. To the westward we hear of its reaching to the furthest parts of Connecticut, and Albany. To the southward it was observed all along the sea-coasts, and to the north as far as our settlements extend. It is probable it extended much beyond these limits in some directions, but the exact boundaries cannot be ascertained by any observations that I have been able to conduct. With regard to its duration, it continued in this place at least fourteen hours; but it is probable this was not exactly the same in different parts of the country. The appearance and effects were such as tended to make the prospect extremely dull and gloomy. Candles were lighted up in the houses; the birds, having sung their evening songs, disappeared, and became silent; the fowls retired to roost: the cocks were crowing all around, as at break of day; objects could not be distinguished but at a very little distance, and everything bore the appearance and gloom of night."—Memoirs of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences: to the End of the Year 1782, Vol. I, pp. 234, 235. Boston: printed by Adams and Nourse, in Court Street, 1785.

The account given in a history of the United States, published only two decades after the event, is of interest, as it tells in more detail of the darkening of the moon on the following night:—

"This day [May 19, 1780] has been rendered very remarkable by an extraordinary phenomenon, which demands a particular relation. An unusual darkness came on between the hours of ten and eleven in the morning, and continued to increase. Your friend, having been accustomed to dark days in London, and frequently observed from his study the bright shining sun gradually, and at length totally, eclipsed as it descended behind the thick vapor which hung over the city, regarded it with no special attention till called to do it by his neighbors who were much alarmed. He dined by candlelight about one. After that it grew much lighter, and he walked about five o'clock to a tavern, a mile distant, on the road to Boston, to meet a select committee of Roxbury, on special business. When they had finished, about eight at night, he set out for home, not suspecting but that, being fully acquainted with every foot of the road, he should easily return, notwithstanding its being extremely dark.

"There were houses all the way, though at a considerable distance from each other. He marked the candlelight of one, and with that in his eye, went forward till he got up to it; but remarked that the appearance of the place was so different from what was usual that he could not believe it to be what it was, had it not been from his certain knowledge of its situation. He caught the light of a second house, which he also reached; and thus on. At length, the light being removed from the last he had gained sight of, ere he was up with it, he found himself in such profound darkness as to be incapable of proceeding, and therefore returned to the house he had passed, and procured a lantern. Several of the company, having farther to go, were on horseback. The horses could not see to direct themselves; and by the manner in which they took up and put down their feet on plain ground, appeared to be involved in total darkness, and to be afraid lest the next step should plunge them into an abyss. The gentlemen soon stopped at another tavern, and waited for the benefit of the moon; but after a while, finding that the air received no accession of light from it, when they were certain it was risen they had recourse to candles to assist them in getting home. In some instances horses felt the forcible operation of the darkness so strongly that they could not be compelled by their masters to quit the stable at night, when wanted for a particular service. The shifting of the wind put an end to it, and at midnight it was succeeded by a bright moon and starlight."

—"The History of the Rise, Progress, and Establishment of the Independence of the United States of America," by William Gordon, D. D., 3 vols., Vol. III, pp. 56, 57. New York, 1801.

As we see that these signs have already been fulfilled, let us rejoice, remembering the words of Luke 21: 28:—

"When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

Every additional sign that we shall find has been fulfilled should but make our joy the greater as it shows the day of Christ's coming to be even still nearer.

L. L. C.

WE need in these days more Christians of depth who have sunk shafts into God's unexploited truths. It takes time to have a realizing sense of sin as well as a realizing sense of God. Solitude is as essential for meditation as society for knowledge of men.—John R. Mott.

What is Jesus to Me?

MRS. MARY H. WILLIAMS

O WORLD'S Redeemer, Priest, and King!
O Lamb of Calvary!
All Christendom thy praises sing;
But what are thou to me?

Art thou my Saviour, Friend, and Guide,
The Bread of Life to me?
Are all my wants in thee supplied?
Do I abide in thee?

Do I with patient heart endure
The straitness of the way?
Ah, flowery paths so oft allure,
And tempt my feet to stray!

But oh, amid life's storms, in fear
Of ills that compass me,
Thou, Lord, my strong high tower, art near;
For refuge there I flee!

How sweet to know, in heaven, where
Our great high priest thou art,
Still, like an ephod, thou dost bear
Our names upon thy heart!

Before God's throne plead thou our cause,
And in the soul's distress
Replace the guilt of broken laws
With thine own righteousness.

My soul's refiner! cleanse thou me,
Enduring grace impart,
Till thine own image thou canst see Reflected in my heart.

Would I for rarest gift of earth
Exchange this hope in thee?
Ah! now I know thy priceless worth,
Thou'rt everything to me.
Minneapolis, Minn.

Marriage with Unbelievers

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(A Personal Letter to a Young Sister)

DEAR SISTER: I have heard of your contemplated marriage with one who is not united with you in religious faith, and I fear that you have not carefully weighed this important matter. Before taking a step which is to exert an influence upon all your future life, I urge you to give the subject careful and prayerful deliberation. Will this new relationship prove a source of true happiness? Will it be a help to you in the Christian life? Will it be pleasing to God? Will your example be a safe one for others to follow?

Before giving her hand in marriage, every woman should inquire whether he with whom she is about to unite her destiny is worthy. What has been his past record? Is his life pure? Is the love which he expresses of a noble, elevated character, or is it a mere emotional fondness? Has he the traits of character that will make her happy? Can she find true peace and joy in his affection? Will she be allowed to preserve her individuality, or must her judgment and conscience be surrendered to the control of her husband? As a disciple of Christ, she is not her own; she has been bought with a price. Can she honor the Saviour's claims as supreme? Will body and soul, thoughts and purposes, be preserved pure and holy? These questions have a vital bearing upon the well-being of every woman who enters the marriage relation.

Religion is needed in the home. Only this can prevent the grievous wrongs which so often embitter married life. Only where Christ reigns, can there be deep, true, unselfish love. Then soul will be knit with soul, and the two lives will blend in harmony. Angels of God will be guests in the home, and their holy vigils will hallow the marriage chamber. Debasement and sensuality will be banished. Upward to God will the thoughts be directed; to him will the heart's devotion ascend.

The heart yearns for human love, but this love is not strong enough or pure enough or precious enough to supply the place of the love of Jesus. Only in her Saviour can the wife find wisdom, strength, and grace to meet the cares, responsibilities, and sorrows of life. She should make him her strength and her guide. Let woman give herself to Christ before giving herself to any earthly friend, and enter into no relation which shall conflict with this. Those who would find true happiness, must have the blessing of heaven upon all that they possess, and all that they do. It is disobedience to God that fills so many hearts and homes with misery. My sister, unless you would have a home where the shadows are never lifted, do not unite yourself with one who is an enemy of God.

As one who expects to meet these words in the judgment, I entreat you to ponder the step you contemplate taking. Ask yourself, "Will not an unbelieving husband lead my thoughts away from Jesus? He is a lover of pleasure more than a lover of God; will he not lead me to enjoy the things that he enjoys?" The path to eternal life is steep and rugged. Take no additional weights to retard your progress. You have too little spiritual strength, and you need help instead of hindrance.

The Lord commanded ancient Israel not to intermarry with the idolatrous nations around them: "Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy

In Rev. 14: 6-14 is found that great threefold message, announcing the opening of the judgment, the fall of Babylon, and the warning against the beast and his image. This message has already girdled the earth. It calls upon all to worship the true God, to render obedience to his precepts, and to prepare for his coming.

• The Eastern Question

Then there is the Eastern Question,—the driving of the Turk from Europe, and the consequent scramble for his territory. The prophecy concerning this power is found largely in the eleventh chapter of Daniel. Speaking of this power, the revelator says, "The sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the East might be prepared." Rev. 16: 12.

For many years the drying up of the power here symbolized by the river Euphrates has been going steadily forward. Today she holds but little territory in Europe, and ere long will be forced to remove her capital from Europe. Eventually she will plant the tabernacles of her palace between the seas, in the Holy Land.

And what is the next great event? "At that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." Dan. 12: 1. The eternal reign of Christ and the deliverance of his people come next.

This line of prophecy, which is so fast fulfilling, brings us to the time when the kingdoms of earth are destroyed, and Michael begins his reign over a kingdom which shall have no end. Earthly kingdoms will then be carried away like the chaff, and the kingdom of Christ will fill the earth.

artificial limbs and eyes, the spectroscope, the kinetoscope or moving pictures, acetylene gas, X-ray apparatus, horseless carriages, and — but, enough! the reader exclaims; and indeed it is not pleasant to contemplate the loss."

But even this extract is antiquated. Since it was written, wireless telegraphy, aeroplanes, and many other marvelous inventions have startled the world. What is the meaning of all this? This wonderful increase of knowledge tells us that the time of the end is here, and that the Lord is at the door.

The "time of the end," the increase of knowledge, then the coming of the Lord!

The Gospel to All the World

In response to the question of the disciples as to what would be the sign of his coming and the end of the world (Matt. 24: 3), Jesus told them there would be wars and rumors of wars, that nation would rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, that there would be famines and pestilence and earthquakes in different parts of the earth. But all these were to be but the beginning of sorrows. Then he said: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Matt. 24: 14.

Little was done to evangelize the world till the "time of the end" began. But when this time was reached, Bible societies were organized, and they began to print God's Word and send it everywhere. The attention of men was turned toward the great Gibralters of heathenism. Today we find the gospel preached in all lands. There is an open door into every nation, and a Macedonian cry for help. Then, too, the gos-but the persecution, being shortened by the power of the Reformation, ended some years earlier. So "in those days, after that tribulation," the sign in the sun, as our Lord foretold, was seen. Of this the most authentic history bears solemn witness.

The following night the darkness was well-nigh impenetrable, and the moon, which shines with borrowed light, when seen had the appearance of blood. Of this, too, history bears testimony.

The Star Shower

On Nov. 13, 1833, occurred that magnificent and awe-inspiring meteoric shower which so many writers mention. For hours the whole firmament seemed to be in fiery commotion, and no other celestial phenomenon has ever occurred in the memory of man which caused such dread and occasioned such widespread alarm. There are those living today who witnessed this marvelous exhibition of falling stars. The people who beheld this sign in the heavens were impressed then that it was a herald of the approaching end of the world.

The Next Event

Of what are these signs a mighty portent? What is the next event to take place, following these signs?—"Then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Matt. 24: 30, 31. Signs in the heavens, then the coming of Jesus!

The Last Generation

That all might clearly understand, the Saviour illustrated the meaning of his words by a parable: "Now learn a parable of the fig tree; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh; so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." Matt. 24: 32-34.

The onward march of time has carried us far past the fulfillment of these ominous signs of the coming day of God. The last generation is here, and although no man knows the day nor the hour when the opening heavens will reveal the King coming with all the angels of heaven, the words of Jesus, the greatest of all prophets, stand sure, and the Son of man is truly at the door.

"The coming King is at the door,
Who once the cross for sinners bore;
But now the righteous ones alone
He comes to gather home.

"The signs that show his coming near
Are fast fulfilling year by year,
But soon we'll hail the glorious dawn
Of heaven's eternal morn."

Like the Days of Noah

While some are lulling the people to sleep with the unscriptural doctrine of the world's conversion, the Saviour has given us a very different picture. It is thus: "As it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all." Luke 17: 26, 27. What folly to advocate the fable of the world's conversion in the presence of such a statement!

In the inspired record given us of the days of Noah we read: "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. . . . The earth also was corrupt before God, and the earth was filled with violence. And God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth." Gen. 6: 5-12.

Man's mind was evil continually, and the earth corrupt; and as it was then it will be again!

This is indeed a dark picture. But a careful and impartial survey of the present condition of things in the world leads us to conclude that we are in the time when these words are being literally fulfilled. Violence and corruption filled the earth in Noah's time. How is it today? Think of the murders, lynchings, suicides, bold outrages, and the inhuman and shocking details of unmentionable crimes and violence which are brought to our attention daily.

In the present dreadful war waged by the nations that have stood for culture and the highest type of civilization, the few details which are allowed to filter through from the front, show that with fire, poisonous gases, and every contrivance that can be devised for killing, maiming, and mutilating the most violent and inhuman deeds are committed, rivaling, it would seem, anything that history records among barbarians. Men are indeed violent and cruel.

A Chicago daily some time ago, speaking of increasing crime, said: "Not only are robberies increasing in number in Chicago, but the highwaymen are more bold and more desperate than formerly. There has been a marked and significant change in the character of these crimes during recent years. Formerly the footpad rarely resorted to violence save as a means of avoiding arrest. Today the robber's weapon is used to injure, maim, and kill." And what is true of Chicago is true of scores of other places. The earth is indeed filled with violence, and beyond question the condition which the Son of man said would immediately precede his

The Signs of Christ's Coming Fulfilled and Fulfilling

Distress of Nations with Perplexity

SPEAKING of the signs of his second coming, the Saviour foretold a time when men's hearts would fail them "for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Luke 21: 26. Notice that just before the coming of Jesus there is to be "distress of nations, with perplexity." Look out on the world. Which nation is not distressed? What nation is not perplexed? There has never before been such distress of nations as today. The world is on fire, and no nation is fireproof. The present war may stop, from exhaustion if for no other reason, but it will be the spawn of wars. Nations are keeping a record of things for which they will demand a settlement. Of what was to follow this very condition of things, the Saviour said: "Then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Luke 21: 27.

Unprecedented distress and perplexity of nations, then the coming of Jesus! Behold he cometh!

"The Alarm of War"

An ancient prophet, looking down the ages, said: "My anguish, my anguish! I am pained at my very heart; my heart is disquieted in me; I cannot hold my peace; because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war. Destruction upon destruction is cried; for the whole land is laid waste; suddenly are my tents destroyed, and my curtains in a moment." Jer. 4: 19, 20.

Truly the alarm of war is here, and the gathering clouds indicate a still greater and more terrible storm. "Destruction upon destruction" is indeed drawing nigh. The seer of Patmos foretold this same time: "The nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. 11: 18.

Truly the "nations are angry," and the next great event is the judgment, the giving of reward to the servants of God, and the destruction of those who destroy the earth. This warlike condition of the world is a fulfillment of God's word, and is a mighty call to all to prepare for the end of the world and the coming of the Lord.

Angry nations, then the Saviour coming with all the armies in heaven!

Preparedness

This word is seen everywhere. The great question for the nations at peace as well as for those at war is that of national preparedness, getting ready for a struggle which is inevitable. This, too, is in striking fulfillment of prophecy. "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles: Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up: beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong." Joel 3: 9, 10.

"Prepare war," said the ancient seer, in the time when "the harvest is ripe," and when "the day of the Lord is near." With startling accuracy the nations are fulfilling these divine utterances.

Increase of Knowledge

The angel Gabriel, speaking to the prophet Daniel, said, "Thou, O Daniel, shut up to the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Dan. 12: 4.

This prophecy is meeting a remarkable fulfillment. We are living in an age of knowledge. For centuries the world made little progress in this direction. But with the beginning of the last century, or the "time of the end" here mentioned, there was a general awakening. Scriptural and scientific knowledge has increased with rapid strides. The knowledge of God's Word has been widely diffused. The past century has witnessed the most marvelous achievements in the field of scientific discovery. Within the lifetime of men now living, most of the marvelous inventions we see have been brought into existence. I quote a few paragraphs from the introduction to a volume called the "Progress of Invention in the Nineteenth Century:"—

Milestones in a Century of Progress

"As we make the backward run of one hundred years, we have passed by many milestones of progress. Let us see if we can count some of them as they disappear behind us. We quickly lose the telephone, phonograph, and grapho-

THE FLOOD — A TYPE OF EARTH'S FINAL DESTRUCTION

phone. We no longer see the cable cars, or electric railways. The electric lights have gone out. The telegraph disappears. The sewing machine, reaper, and threshing have passed away, and so also have all India-rubber goods. We no longer see any photographs, photo-engravings, photolithographs, or snapshot cameras. The wonderful octuple web-perfecting printing press, which prints, pastes, cuts, folds, and counts newspapers at the rate of 96,000 an hour, or 1,600 a minute, shrinks at the beginning of the nineteenth century into an insignificant prototype. We lose all planing and woodworking machinery, and with it the endless variety of sashes, doors, blinds, and furniture. There are no gas engines, no passenger elevators, no asphalt pavement, no steam fire engine, no triple-expansion steam engine, no Giffard's injector, no celluloid articles, no barbed-wire fences, no time locks for safes, no self-binding harvesters, no oil or gas wells, no ice machines nor cold storage. We lose air engines, stem-winding watches, cash registers, and cash carriers, the great suspension bridges, the tunnels, the Suez Canal, iron-frame buildings, monitors and heavy ironclads, revolvers, torpedoes, magazine guns and Gatling guns, linotype machines, all practical typewriters, all Pasteurizing, knowledge of microbes or disease germs, and sanitary plumbing, water gas, soda water fountains, air brakes, coal-tar dyes and medicines, nitroglycerin, dynamite and gun cotton, dynamo-electric machines, aluminum ware, electric locomotives, Bessemer steel with its wonderful developments, ocean cables, enameled ironware, Welsbach gas burners, electric storage batteries, the cigarette machine, hydraulic dredges, the roller mills, middlings purifiers and patent-process flour, tin can machines, ear couplings, compressed-air drills, sleeping cars, the dynamite gun, the McKay shoe machine, the circular knitting machine, the Jacquard loom, wood pulp for paper, fire alarms, the use of anesthetics in surgery, oleomargarine, street sweepers, Artesian wells, friction matches, steam hammers, electroplating, mail machines, false teeth, pel of the kingdom, heralding the glorious news of the second coming of Christ, is also preached in all the world. Not all who hear the gospel will believe and be saved, but it will gather out of the nations a people for his name. When this gospel of the kingdom is preached in all the world, the end will come. The open door and the proclamation of the gospel everywhere constitutes signs of the end of the world and the close of probation.

The gospel to all the world, and then the end, and the coming of Jesus!

Signs in the Heavens

Replying further to the question of his disciples, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Jesus said: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken." Matt. 24: 29. The evangelist Mark in writing concerning these signs, said they were to take place "in those days, after that tribulation." Chap. 13: 24. The "tribulation" here mentioned, without doubt refers to the 1260 years of papal supremacy, beginning A. D. 538 and ending in A. D. 1798.

Signs in sun, moon, and stars — these are all the places in the heavens where the Lord could hang a sign. A darkened sun, and a moon appearing as blood, and falling stars, — surely such startling and supernatural manifestations as these could not be hung out by the hand of God in the celestial bodies, and no notice be taken of them either by the historian or by those living when the events took place!

The Dark Day

The same faithfulness and accuracy, however, which are ever seen in the fulfillment of the predictions of the Lord in other scriptures, are seen in the signs here foretold. On May 19, 1780, the sun was supernaturally darkened. The time of the papal supremacy ended in 1798, second coming is here, telling us that the end of the world is near. When the earth becomes as wicked as it was in Noah's time, the Lord will cleanse it with fire, as he did then with water.

Like the Days of Lot

Continuing, the Saviour said: "Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." Luke 17: 28-30.

THE STRUGGLE BETWEEN CAPITAL AND LABOR

The world to be like Sodom and Gomorrah! What a picture!

It is sad to be forced to look upon such a condition in the world. But it is the harvest of sin. Wickedness and moral corruption abound. Paul warned us that evil men and seducers would "wax worse and worse." These words are fulfilling before our eyes. The outbursts of sin are seen in all the walks of life, among the rich as well as the poor. A Methodist clergyman has well said: "Old Rome in her worst days never harbored such conditions of vice as are prevalent in our highest social orders. Never at any period of the world's history has the moral stratum been so thin."

A recent exposure of blackmail showed that among the rich many have been paying over large sums of money to keep their immorality from being exposed. Think of the shocking exposures that would be made if the curtain should be lifted, and all be seen as God beholds it! White slavery and prostitution are doing a terrible work. The wrecks of moral depravity are strewn on every land. The divorce courts are choked with the cases of those who hold the marriage vow as a thing of little worth.

Sin is capable of taking on a high polish, and in theaters and gilded halls of amusement and vice it is set forth in its most alluring form. A refined and educated member of society was interviewed some time ago concerning what is called fashionable dances. She spoke of the low, bestial dances which are coming into society. She was asked if she had noticed that they had changed. "Have I?" she replied. "I should say I have—these wretched, vulgar dances! This 'turkey trot' business which I have seen during the last winter is too disgusting for words. It only shows that our whole country is becoming materialistic and vulgarized." She said further that she remembered—and "I am not a very old woman"—when to be invited to certain great houses in New York was a social privilege and an honor. "Today," she said, "there isn't a house in New York which means anything in a great social way. The same laxity and vulgarity have been brought about through the popularizing of divorce. Young girls marry and trip lightly into the 'tie that binds,' with a sense of liberty which can be theirs if they choose, and change their minds after marriage."

The trend of things in this direction is woefully downward. We wish it were otherwise. Sin is indeed ripening for the harvest, and the mighty Reaper with the sickle is soon to come, and gather the wheat into his garner and cast the tares into the great wine press of God's wrath.

The earth like Sodom and Gomorrah, then the cleansing, and the coming of Jesus!

Piling Up Fortunes

An ancient prophet speaks of a time when the land would be full of silver and gold, and there would be no end of treasure. Isa. 2: 7. James speaks of a time when men will pile up vast fortunes. "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." James 5: 1-3.

The increase of wealth in recent years is phenomenal. At no other period in the history of the world has there been such an accumulation of wealth in the period spanning the life of one man, or one generation. Tremendous fortunes are created in a very brief period.

One writer says: "Such colossal fortunes, such hoarding of treasures, such combinations of wealth, with such rapid increase of poverty, was never witnessed before. Our age alone fits the prophetic mold."

Bishop Potter is reported as saying: "The growth of wealth and of luxury, wicked, wasteful, and wanton, as before God I declare that luxury to be, has been matched step by step by a deepening and deadening poverty which has left whole neighborhoods of people practically without hope and without aspiration."

Near the close of the Civil War the wise and sagacious Lincoln is reported to have said: "I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me, and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned, and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until the wealth is concentrated in the hands of a few, and this republic is destroyed."

What is the meaning of this enormous aggregation of capital? It has a deep significance. This heaping together of treasure was to be "in the last days." James 5: 3, A. R. V. The Book of God declares that there will come a time when there will be such fabulous increase of wealth, such hitherto unheard-of fortunes gathered in such a comparatively brief time, as to attract attention, and constitute one of the signs of the approaching end. This sign of the day of God stands out clearly before us.

The heaping up of riches, the last days, then the end! With a mighty warning voice these things speak to the world, bidding all prepare for the appearing of the Son of man.

The Millionaire and Pauper

The vast gulf between the enormously rich and the very poor, between millionaire and pauper, with the greed of the natural heart, breeds an unrest among the laboring class which is world wide, and threatens to lead to such an upheaval as will convulse the world and bring the miseries foretold upon the rich. The corruption of concentrated wealth and the vice and crime of poverty do not tend to the stability of government. Much of this great concentration of capital, these colossal and hitherto unheard-of fortunes, is the result of fraudulent manipulation. After speaking of the miseries and sorrows coming upon the rich, James says, "Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth." James 5: 4.

The extravagant luxury of the rich leads to unrest, and in some instances breeds contempt. Many fashionable hotels, apartment houses, and tenements, while admitting dogs, exclude children. Luxurious suppers are given where priceless jewels are worn, and tens of thousands of dollars are wantonly and lavishly squandered. A metropolitan daily speaks of the surpassing magnificence of one of these princely gatherings, as follows:—

"The most sumptuous, brilliant, and costly social function that New York has ever known was the fancy-dress ball given by Mrs. — at the Waldorf last night.

"About eight hundred people were there, of whom more than four hundred and fifty were women. The ball placed about $500,000 in circulation.

"The ball began at midnight, and ended at five o'clock this morning. Therefore its pleasures cost at the rate of $100,000 an hour. The cost to the hostess was about $125,000. It was a superb spectacle. People came thousands of miles to attend it."

Costly garments purchased to be worn on such an occasion, then laid away for the moths to eat, while orphans shiver with cold! Expensive funerals arranged for the burial of poodles, while thousands of children within a few blocks are suffering for the comforts of life!

This condition leads a prominent daily to say:—

"Is it any wonder that there is an ominous condition of unrest against the accumulation of vast wealth, and that Socialism is menacing on the increase?"

For protection against the grinding power of the combination of capital, labor has sought to unite, forming unions and various combinations, having originally in view the betterment of the working classes. Their requests for shorter hours and increased pay are denied, and their demands must be enforced in some way; so disastrous strikes and lockouts are resorted to. The history of these things is so well known that we need only to refer to it. But while the working classes stand up against what they believe to be injustice, trade unions in many instances exhibit a tyrannical power and a destructive spirit which spreads dismay and terror throughout the land. The United States Congress was forced recently, in order to avert a threatened strike which would tie up all the main lines of railroad and entail untold suffering, especially in cities, to take quick action, incorporating into law some of the demands of the unions. The President in a recent speech is reported as saying that "the chief cloud that is upon the domestic horizon is the unsatisfactory relation of capital and labor." The menacing attitude of these labor combines may well make us afraid.

It is clear to every impartial observer that there is a time of great trouble before us, trouble between the power of capital, organized into trusts and various commercial enterprises and combines, and the organized forces of labor. Enough of the cloud can already be seen above the horizon to indicate a storm which may lead to social revolution and bring a veritable reign of terror. To those living at this time the Lord says: "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." James 5: 8. Our only hope is in God.

This ominous unrest in the industrial world is another of the many conditions which indicate the near return of the Lord Jesus, who alone can bring peace to all.

Worldliness in the Church

Speaking concerning the prevailing iniquity of the last days, the apostle Paul says: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unboly, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away." 2 Tim. 3: 1-5.

This is a startling list of sins mentioned by the inspired apostle. All these are the outgrowth of the depravity of the natural heart. And the church, instead of triumphing like an army with banners, has lost her power. While a form of godliness is maintained, the power which should be manifested with the form is lacking.

A temple left desolate! A body without the living breath of life!

This is a sad picture. But sad as it is, it is exhibited all about us. Spiritual dearth is found everywhere. The Word of God is set aside. Infidelity in the form of higher criticism is preached from many pulpits. Prayer is neglected. Theaters are more frequented by church members than is the prayer meeting. Card parties are held regularly in the homes of many professed Christians—"lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." Church entertainments, such as suppers, festivals, and lotteries, crowd the church, the place dedicated to the most high God.

Serious discussion was recently given by one of the largest and most powerful denominations, to the question as to whether it would not be wise to strike from its Discipline the prohibition against dancing. Such prohibitions, however, are usually allowed to be but a dead letter, for many church members are found, in attire none too modest, in the sensual whirl of the dance. Theaters and dance halls filled with those whose names are enrolled as believers in Christ as their Saviour, yet the pews empty at the prayer meeting! Surely we have reached the time when a form of godliness without the power is seen. Worldly pleasure has drowned the voice of conscience, and eaten from the heart the love of that which is holy and upright.

What is the meaning of this marked decline in spirituality which has become so apparent? "This know that in the last days perilous times shall come." It means that the end is near. The world is fast reaching the place where Sodom and Gomorrah stood, and when it becomes like the cities of the plains it will meet a similar fate. "Fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them." Rev. 20: 9. Because of the abounding iniquity the love of many is waxing cold. Matt. 24: 12. Once the church loses its power, and the Holy Spirit, resisted and grieved, withdraws, there will be nothing to stop the downward trend of the world. It remains then only for the Lord to come, translate his people, and destroy all sin and sinners, and give the earth, all new and clean, to the saints of the Most High.

The Glorious Appearing of Christ

"Some" great events have taken place since Adam crossed the threshold of his Eden home for the last time. That was a momentous hour when, because of the wickedness of man, the Lord opened the windows of heaven and with the besom of destruction swept man and his vileness from the earth.

That was a great event when, from the blazing top of Mt. Sinai, amid darkness and thick clouds, the flash and lightning and the roll minating the mountain top and devouring the sacrifice and the altar stones.

That was a great event when the disciples of Christ were all with one accord in one place on the day of Pentecost, waiting for the fulfillment of the promise. "And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat of thunder, the Lord in majesty and power spoke his law to quailing humanity, and handed down to Israel its precepts, traced on stone by the finger of God.

CHRIST TEACHING HIS DISCIPLES CONCERNING THE DESTRUCTION OF JERUSALEM AND THE SIGNS OF HIS COMING

That was a great hour when Elijah, at whose word the clouds had been chained, stood before the four hundred prophets of Baal, and sent out that challenge to settle the question as to who was the true God—Baal, or the God whom Elijah worshiped. That was a tense hour when, the false prophets having failed, Elijah, who had in a sense looked up the treasures of nature, having prepared the altar, looked up into heaven "at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, . . . and said, Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things at thy word. Hear me, O Lord, hear me, that this people may know that thou art the Lord God, and that thou hast turned their heart back again." 1 Kings 18: 36, 37. The flame descended like a lightning flash, illu-upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Acts 2: 2-4.

The Greatest of All Events

But the greatest of all events will be at that awful and sublime hour when the Saviour returns the second time in all his glory, calls forth the righteous dead, changes the righteous living from mortality to immortality, destroys the wicked, and with the redeemed ascends to the city of God. Before this solemn event, whose glory no pen can describe, all other events pale like the stars before the noonday sun. Inspired writers have spoken of it as follows:—

"Whoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels." Luke 9: 26.

"The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall Christ has spoken; Christ has led his people, and has been the light of the world. When God chose Abraham as a representative of his truth, he took him out of his country, and away from his kindred, and set him apart. He desired to mold him after his own model. He desired to teach him according to his own plan. The mold of the world's teachers was not to be upon him. He was to be taught how to command his children and his household after him, to keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment. This is the work that God would have us do. He would have us understand how to govern our families, how to control our children, how to command our households to keep the way of the Lord."

So far as we know, Sister White has never made any statement as to the identity of Melchizedek. Perhaps the clearest statement she makes is found in "Patriarchs and Prophets," page 136. After speaking of some who came out to meet Abraham on his return from his victory over the Canaanites, she says:—

"Another who came out to welcome the victorious patriarch, was Melchizedek, king of Salem, who brought forth bread and wine for the refreshment of his army. As 'priest of the most high God,' he pronounced a blessing upon Abraham, and gave thanks to the Lord, who had wrought so great a deliverance by his servant. And Abraham 'gave him tithes of all.'"

The best statement we have regarding this Bible character is found in Gen. 14: 18-20 and the several references in the book of Hebrews, particularly in Heb. 7: 1-11. With these simple statements and the lessons which the apostle draws from them we evidently must content ourselves. Idle speculation over the question will prove of little value.

F. M. W.

ELDER C. A. PAAP writes from Taungs, South Africa: "Two weeks ago we organized a Sabbath school here, and we now have a membership of twenty-nine. Twenty-six of these are new Sabbath keepers. Five stores close on the Sabbath. These people love God and his Word. We have sold about one hundred dollars' worth of Bibles and our denominational books to those who attend the services. The people are so thankful for what we have done that they are furnishing a house for us at their own cost. So far we have lived in a boarding house. The Dutch farmers forty miles away have repeatedly sent for us to come and hold meetings in their community, so next week two of our new converts are going out with me to act as interpreters. These people are very susceptible to God's Word. We have abundant evidence that the Lord is leading us, and we are very much encouraged. The power of his Word is making great reformatations in the lives of the people."

A FEW weeks ago a Seventh-day Adventist church of fifty members was organized for the colored people at Muskogee, Okla. A class of thirty are studying different points of the third angel's message preparatory to baptism.

Bible Studies

The Second Coming of Christ — No. 2

CHRIST is coming the second time. There is no discord, no dissonance, in the prophetic chords which declare this glorious truth. The day of his coming will be the day of deliverance to his waiting people, the ushering in of their jubilee over Satan, sin, and death, the glad and grand fruition of their longing desires and eager expectations.

In the study of last week we learned the manner in which Christ will return:—

1. His coming will be a personal coming. He says, "I will come again." John 14: 1-3.

2. His coming will be literal. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven." 1 Thess. 4: 16.

3. His coming will be visible. "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him." Rev. 1: 7.

The purpose of his coming is also clearly indicated in the Scriptures of truth,—he comes to establish his kingdom. 2 Tim. 4: 1; Matt. 16: 27. This earth in its purified condition will constitute the territory of his kingdom (2 Peter 3: 7-13), and those who have been raised from the dead and those translated from among the living at his appearing, will constitute the subjects of that kingdom. 1 Thess. 4: 16-18; 1 Cor. 15: 51-55.

Can we know the day and the hour of his coming? The Scriptures positively assert that we cannot. "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." Matt. 24: 36. But in the same connection the Master tells us that when we see certain things come to pass, we may know that his coming is near, "even at the doors." Verse 33.

Multiplied Signs

What are these signs by which we may know when the second coming of Christ is near? In the discourse from which we have just quoted, the Saviour declares, as recorded by Luke: "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Luke 21: 25-28. Other signs are also enumerated. For convenience we will classify these under the following natural divisions:—

1. Signs in the heavens.
2. Signs in the physical world.
3. Signs in the social world.
4. Signs in the industrial world.
5. Signs in the political world.

6. Signs in the religious world.

These groups of signs we will consider in the order enumerated.

Signs in the Heavens

When the great luminaries of heaven were created, six thousand years ago, the divine Record states that they were made "for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years." Gen. 1: 14. In no more significant manner could the Lord present to mankind signs of his second coming than in phenomena to be seen in the heavenly bodies. The prophet Joel states that the sun, moon, and stars should be used for this purpose just preceding the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. "I will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered: for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call." Joel 2: 30-32. Here the specific signs to be seen in the heavenly bodies are pointed out. "The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood."

The Darkening of the Sun

We find reference to these conditions in several New Testament scriptures. The most notable is the statement made by the Lord. According to Matthew, this statement is as follows: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Matt. 24: 29, 30.

Papal Domination

To what tribulation is reference here made?—Evidently to the long period of tribulation brought upon the church through the domination of the papal power of Rome. The length of this tribulation, and the havoc it would work in the church of God, are represented in these words of the prophet Daniel: "He shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time." Dan. 7: 25.

As will appear more clearly in subsequent studies, this period of papal domination began in 538 A. D., and continued till 1798. We find, however, that as the result of the Reformation of the sixteenth century and of the spirit of enlightenment and liberal thought which spread throughout Europe, especially among the higher classes, together with the opening up of the New World as an asylum for the oppressed of Europe, the power of the persecutor was greatly lessened before the end of this period.

The Days Shortened

The spirit of this age is expressed by one writer in the following concise language:—

"The new spirit of the age, emanating from Paris, was fully recognized by the sovereigns and the prime ministers of the different nations of continental Europe, who inaugurated various civil, political, and ecclesiastical reforms. They sought to put in practice what was advocated in speech and writing as the truth. In all these European countries zealous efforts were made to revolutionize ancient forms and institutions, laws and customs, and by new arrangements to adapt them to the spirit of the age. In the realm of religion this spirit of reform first manifested itself by proclaiming toleration in matters of religious faith, in the suppression of the order of Jesuits."—Library of Universal History, p. 2447.

On page 2448 this same authority continues:—

"General hostility to the Roman Catholic Church and its most powerful and celebrated order, the Jesuits, was manifested in several of the Roman Catholic countries, such as Portugal, Spain, and France. . . . The Jesuits were successively banished from such Roman Catholic countries as Portugal, Spain, France, and Naples; and the order was finally suppressed by a papal edict, though it was subsequently restored."

The year 1759 marked the expulsion of the Jesuits from Portugal. In 1767 they were banished from Spain. France banished the order in 1764.

Regarding the influence exerted by the triumphant spirit of democracy in the New World, the same authority says, on page 2447:—

"The triumph of the American Revolution, which established popular government in the New World, seemed to justify the destruction of all thrones and class distinctions, though few considered the severe moral training which had prepared the Anglo-American colonists for their unique and heroic task. In the War of American Independence, the people of Europe, who were filled with the ideas and dreams of Rousseau, saw the beginning of the great struggle which was to give the human race a state of paradisaical happiness."

Thus the beginning of the last quarter of the eighteenth century saw the power of the Roman see greatly lessened in nearly every nation of Europe. Men and women had begun to think for themselves. Kings and emperors refused to hold their high offices as a grant from the papal see. It would perhaps be safe to conclude that the year 1776 marked a new order of things in the civil and religious rights of mankind. The colonists came to America, establishing a church without a pope and a state without a king. This spirit of political democracy and religious freedom honeycombed the governments of the Old World, and prepared the way for the overthrow of papal domination.

How specific is the prediction of the Lord: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened." Matt. 24:29. "In those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened." Mark 13:24. Somewhere, then, between the years 1776 and 1798 we are to look for the occurrence of this notable sign in the heavens.

Another proof that the sun was to be darkened about this time was to be found in the seven seals. "I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood." Rev. 6:12. The great earthquake here referred to is undoubtedly what is known as the Lisbon earthquake, which occurred Nov. 1, 1755. As will be noted, the darkening of the sun was soon to follow this. An additional feature regarding the moon is brought to view here, the prophecy stating that it would become as blood.

As to the time of day when the sun would be darkened, the prophecy thus speaks: "The sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine." Isa. 13:10.

We may therefore summarize the following particular specifications regarding this celestial phenomenon:—

1. The sun was to be darkened as a sign of the day of the Lord. Matt. 24:29; Joel 2:31.

2. It was to be darkened between the years 1776 and 1798. Mark 13:24.

3. It was to be darkened after the great earthquake of 1755. Rev. 6:12.

4. It was to be darkened in the morning. Isa. 13:10.

5. In connection with this sign the moon should not give her light. Matt. 24:29; Mark 13:24; Isa. 13:10.

6. The moon would present the appearance of blood. Rev. 6:12; Joel 2:31.

Was this twofold sign fulfilled at the time and in the manner above specified? We affirm unhesitatingly that it was. May 19, 1780, witnessed the fulfilment of all these specifications. In proof, we wish to present the following testimonies, selected from the many witnesses who might be called upon to testify.

Striking Testimonies

Declares Robert Sears, in "The Guide to Knowledge, or Repertory of Facts," published in New York, 1845, page 428:—

"On the nineteenth of May, 1780, an uncommon darkness took place all over New England, and extended to Canada. It continued about fourteen hours, or from ten o'clock in the morning till midnight. The darkness was so great that people were unable to read common print, or tell the time of day by their watches, or to dine, or transact their ordinary business, without the light of candles. They became dull and gloomy, and some were excessively frightened. The fowls retired to their roosts. Objects could not be distinguished but at a very little distance, and everything bore the appearance of gloom and night."

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, edition of 1869, contains the following statement regarding this remarkable day:—

"The dark day, May 19, 1780, so called on account of a remarkable darkness on that day extending over all New England. In some places persons could not see to read common print in the open air for several hours together. . . . The true cause of this remarkable phenomenon is not known."

In closing our testimonials regarding this most interesting phenomenon, we append the following lines from the Quaker poet, J. G. Whittier, in "Abraham Davenport:"—

"'Twas on a May day of the far old year
Seventeen hundred eighty, that there fell
Over the bloom and sweet life of the spring,
Over the fresh earth and the heaven of
noon,
A horror of great darkness, like the night
In day of which the Norland sagas tell,—
The twilight of the gods.

"Birds ceased to sing, and all the barnyard fowls
Roosted; the cattle at the pasture bars Low'd, and look'd homeward; bats on leathern wings
Flitt'd abroad; the sounds of labor died;
Men pray'd, and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom blast of the trumpet
shatter
The black sky."

It may be argued by the objector that there have been several dark days in the history of the world, and he inquires which one of these shall be taken as a sign of the coming of the Lord. We answer, The dark day coming at the time specified in the prophecy. There may have been hundreds of dark days during the Christian era, every one as dense and terrifying as the dark day of May 19, 1780; but the dark day of that date stands apart from all its fellows in that it came at the particular time specified in the prophecy; viz., during the period of papal domination, but after the Papacy had ceased its persecutions. To this dark day the prophecy of the Lord refers, and to none other.

The Falling of the Stars

Following the darkening of the sun, the next phenomenon to be observed in the heavens, according to the prediction of our Saviour, was the falling of the stars. We cannot, of course, understand by the term "stars" that reference is made to the fixed planets of the universe, many of which are many times larger than this earth, and were they really to fall, instead of being merciful signs to warn men of coming destruction, they would actually bring chaos and ruin into the universe of God. Christ evidently refers here to meteors, or shooting stars. Dr. Thomas Burnet, commenting upon this scripture over a hundred years before its fulfilment, says:—

"The last sign we shall take notice of is that of 'falling stars.' 'And the stars shall fall from heaven,' says our Saviour. Matt. 24:29. We are sure, from the nature of the thing, that this cannot be understood either of fixed stars or planets; for if either of these should tumble from the skies and reach the earth, they would break it all in pieces, or swallow it up, as the sea does a sinking ship; and at the same time would put all the inferior universe into confusion. It is necessary, therefore, by these stars to understand either fiery meteors falling from the middle region of the air, or comets and blazing stars. No doubt there will be all sorts of fiery meteors at that time; and amongst others those which are called falling stars; which, though they are not considerable singly, yet if they were multiplied in great numbers, falling, as the prophet says, as leaves from the vine, or leaves from the fig tree, they would make an astonishing sight."—"Sacred Theory of the Earth," book 3, p. 66, third edition, 1697.

The manner in which the stars were to fall is also stated in the Sacred Word. We quote from Rev. 6:12, 13:—

"I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind."

The figure of speech here employed to represent the manner in which the stars would fall, is used by eyewitnesses in describing the great star shower of Nov. 13, 1833. A writer in the New York Journal of Commerce, Vol. VIII, No. 534, Nov. 16, 1833, describes the event as follows:—

"And how did they fall? Neither myself nor one of the family heard any report; and were I to hunt through nature for a simile, I could not find one so apt to illustrate the appearance of the heavens as that which St. John uses in the prophecy, before quoted. 'It rained fire,' says one. Another, 'It was like a shower of fire.' Another, 'It was like the large flakes of falling snow, before a coming storm, or large drops of rain before a shower.' I admit the fitness of these for common accuracy; but they come far short of the accuracy of the figure used by the prophet. 'The stars of heaven fell unto the earth;' they were not sheets, or flakes, or drops of fire; but they were what the world understands by the name of 'falling stars;' and one speaking to his fellow in the midst of the scene, would say: 'See how the stars fall!' and he who heard, would not pause to correct the astronomy of the speaker, any more than he would reply, 'The sun does not move,' to one who should tell him, 'The sun is rising.' The stars fell 'even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.' Here is the exactness of the prophet. The falling stars did not come, as if from several trees shaken, but from one: those which appeared in the east fell toward the east; those which appeared in the north fell toward the north; those which appeared in the west fell toward the west; and those which appeared in the south (for I went out of my residence into the park) fell toward the south; and they fell, not as the ripe fruit falls. Far from it. But they flew, they were cast, like the unripe fruit, which at first refuses to leave the branch; and when it does break its hold flies swiftly, straight off, descending; and in the multitude falling some cross the track of others, as they were thrown with more or less force. Such was the appearance of the above phenomenon to the inmates of my house. I walked into the park with two gentlemen of Pearl Street, feeling and confessing that this scene had never been figured to our minds by any book or mortal, save only by the prophet."

Before the coming of the Lord, doubtless other remarkable phenomena will be seen in the heavens. Joel 2:30. They, however, are not individually pointed out in the same specific manner as the darkening of the sun and the falling of the stars. These events stand forth as the two great celestial signs of the coming of the Lord, and having taken place, we know that the coming of the Lord is near.

We are living today between the events brought to view in verses 13 and 14 of the prophecy of Revelation 6. We have seen with our own eyes or on the page of history, the fulfilment of the signs foretold in verses 12 and 13; while verse 14 declares of the future: "The heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together: and every mountain and island were moved out of their places." We may lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing that our "redemption draweth nigh."

Questions

1. Describe the threefold manner in which Christ will return to this earth.
2. What does Christ come to establish? What will constitute the territory of his kingdom? Who the inhabitants?
3. Can we know the day or the hour of Christ's coming?
4. How near may we know his coming to be from conditions which we see in the world?
5. For what did the Lord declare that he made the sun, moon, and stars?
6. What testimony did the prophet Joel bear regarding signs in the heavens?
7. What signs of his coming does the Lord say shall be seen in the heavens?
8. To what tribulation is reference here made?
9. How does the prophet Daniel describe this tribulation?
10. When did the papal domination begin, and when end?
11. What influences served greatly to lessen the power of the persecutor?
12. What notable order in the Catholic Church was suppressed about this time?
13. What can you say of the influence of the opening of the New World?
14. Within what period, then, would we look for the darkening of the sun?
15. How does the revelator describe the darkening of the sun?
16. Name the six particular specifications by which the dark day of May 10, 1780, was pointed out.

17. How does Robert Sears describe this event?

18. What statement is made by Noah Webster?

19. Why should the particular dark day of May 19, 1780, be chosen as the one fulfilling the prophecy?

20. What was the next great sign to be seen in the heavens, signifying the nearness of the coming of the Lord?

21. What is meant by the term "stars"?

22. By what figure is the falling of the stars illustrated in the prophecy of Revelation 6?

23. Describe the manner in which this sign was fulfilled.

24. Where in the prophecy of the seven seals are we living today?

25. As we see the fulfilment of the signs, what may we know?

That Blessed Hope

C. F. CAMPBELL

"THE grace of God, that bringeth salvation, hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." Titus 2:11-14.

According to the prophecies of the Bible, which foretell the signs preceding the end of the present world and the return of our Lord, we are living in the very last hours of earth's history. It is time for us to look up, for our redemption draweth nigh. We are looking for the fulfilment of "that blessed hope," the second coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Then he will take his redeemed children with him, to inhabit the mansions which he has gone to prepare; for he promised his disciples, when he ascended from the Mount of Olives, that he would prepare a place for his followers, that where he is, there they may be also. Then we may sing with full understanding,—

"Face to face with Christ my Saviour, Face to face—what will it be
When with rapture I behold him,
Jesus Christ, who died for me?"

"What rejoicing in his presence,
When are banished grief and pain,
When the crooked ways are straightened,
And the dark things shall be plain!"

Then he will change our vile bodies that they may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. Phil. 3:21. Then these corruptible bodies will be made incorruptible, and this mortal will put on immortality. I Cor. 15:53, 54.

In that glad day the redeemed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads; and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. It makes no difference where they may be sleeping, whether at the bottom of the ocean or alone in some heathen land, the chosen of the Lord will be gathered home, where there will be joy and gladness. Then we shall meet to part no more. When the resurrection morning dawns, the trump of God will call the elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. Matt. 24:31. At that time will be fulfilled the word of the Lord: "Gather my saints together and attainments with the description given above of the Hebrew captives? Our system of education is modeled after the Hebrew system as carried on in the home and in the schools of the prophets, and if strictly adhered to, will surely yield the same kind of product.

In order that we may more clearly see the physical, mental, and spiritual attainments realized by these Hebrew youth, and be led more earnestly and intelligently to seek to acquire them, a summary of their acquisitions is here given:—

1. "Erect form."
2. "Firm, elastic step."
3. "Fair countenance."
4. "Undimmed senses."
5. "Untainted breath."
6. "Keen comprehension."
7. "Wide knowledge."
8. "Choice and exact language."
9. "An excellent spirit."
10. "Maintained their allegiance to God."

This high standard of attainment can be reached now as it was then. This is how they reached it:—

"They obtained their knowledge by the faithful use of their powers, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. They placed themselves in connection with the Source of all wisdom, making the knowledge of God the foundation of their education. In faith they prayed for wisdom, and they lived their prayers. They placed themselves where God could bless them. They avoided that which would weaken their powers, and improved every opportunity to become intelligent in all lines of learning. They followed the rules of life that could not fail to give them strength of intellect. They sought to acquire knowledge for one purpose,—that they might honor God. They realized that in order to stand as representatives of true religion amid the false religions of heathenism, they must have clearness of intellect, and must perfect a Christian character. And God himself was their teacher. Constantly praying, conscientiously studying, keeping in touch with the Unseen, they walked with God as did Enoch."

"The same mighty truths that were revealed through these men, God desires to reveal through the youth and children today. The life of Daniel and his fellows is a demonstration of what he will do for those who yield themselves to him, and with the whole heart seek to accomplish his purpose."—Id., "Captivity and Restoration," pp. 486-490.

"Each one resembled the children of a king." Joseph, Moses, Gideon, David, Esther, Daniel and his fellows, were kingly and queenly in character because they were children of the heavenly King. They were privileged to sit in the high places of earth. This may never be our high privilege, but we, with them, being adopted into the heavenly family, shall one day sit with Him who is "King of kings and Lord of lords." "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. 3:21.

The Signs of Matthew 24: 29

C. P. BOLLMAN

SPECIAL interest attaches to the signs foretold in Matthew 24: 29, for the reason that the relative time of their appearance is clearly stated: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened." Mark says, "In those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened." Chap. 13: 24.

The "days" referred to we understand to be the twelve hundred and sixty years of papal supremacy, and of wearing out the saints of the Most High, foretold in Dan. 7: 25, and referred to by our Saviour as recorded in Matt. 24: 21, 22 and Mark 13: 19, 20.

This time of papal supremacy began, we understand, with the defeat of the Goths—a military event—before Rome, A. D. 538, and ended with another military event, the taking of the Pope prisoner, A. D. 1798, and the temporary abolition of the Papacy by General Berthier, acting for, and under orders from, the French Directory.

As indicated by both Matthew and Mark, not all the twelve hundred and sixty days, or years, of papal supremacy were to be years of persecution, or of wearing out the saints. "For the elect's sake," or in other words, that some "flesh," that is, some of God's people, might be saved, the days of actual persecution should be "shortened." Or, to express the thought in another way, the years of papal supremacy would extend beyond the time of persecution, or of putting to death for the truth's sake; for "in those days, after that tribulation," the signs would begin to appear.

And so they did. Persecution of Protestants by papists has never entirely ceased, but there has been no general persecution in any country since the middle of the eighteenth century. Then, May 19, 1780, came the notable dark day, followed by a remarkably dark night, and this notwithstanding it was at the time of full moon.

The most remarkable thing about these signs was not so much the darkness,—though that has never been satisfactorily accounted for,—but the fact that it was so definitely foretold by our Lord many centuries before its occurrence.

It has been claimed by some that the darkness was occasioned by the coincidence of fogs and forest fires, fog and smoke so thickening the air as to shut out the rays of the sun by day, and of the moon and stars by night. It is true that there was at the time a thick, murky atmosphere, but that does not account for the fact that history records no other instance of such remarkable darkness over so large an area, and that the approximate time of this darkness was foretold by Jesus of Nazareth more than seventeen and a half centuries before it occurred. And not only so, but he gave it as one of a series of signs which should serve as a warning of the approach of his second advent.

It is sometimes sought to emphasize the significance of this darkness by stating that the stars were seen. But this is a mistake. The night could not have been so dark as it was had the stars been seen. Neither man nor beast has any great difficulty in getting about upon starlight nights; but upon the night of May 19, 1780, horses refused to leave their stalls, and when forced out and away from artificial light, showed by the way they walked that they could see nothing.

The darkness of the fore part of that night was total, and whatever its cause, it affected alike all the heavenly bodies, or rather, arrested alike the light from sun, moon, and stars. The obscuration was evidently due, therefore, to atmospheric conditions, since it was not worldwide. Had the sun itself been darkened, that is, had the orb of day ceased to shine for approximately fourteen hours, or from ten o'clock in the morning until the following midnight, the darkness must have been observed over seven twelfths of the earth's surface, instead of over New England and adjacent waters on the east and that part of New York State lying east of Albany and north of Peekskill.

But the fact that the darkening of the sun and moon, May 19, 1780, was local, and granting it was caused by natural means, does not prove that the concurrence of several phenomena at that time was not supernatural, or, in other words, that the conditions which caused the darkness were not directly due to an act or acts of that Being who in Egypt "gave them hail for rain, and flaming fire in their land," who "spoke, and the locusts came, and caterpillars, and that without number, and did eat up all the herbs in their land, and devoured the fruit of their ground." Ps. 105: 32-35. "For he commandeth, and raiseth the stormy wind," and again he "maketh the storm a calm." Ps. 107: 25, 29.

The Lord is not straitened for agencies to use in the accomplishment of his purpose. All nature is at his command, so that the Saviour could say that not even a sparrow falls to the ground without his Father.

Science may describe probable causes, a combination of which might have produced the unparalleled darkness of that dark day and dark night, but only the Word of God can tell us the meaning of that darkness, and only one who knows the end from the beginning could have foretold the time of its occurrence, and given us unmistakable marks of identification by a setting that only blind unbelief can mistake.

The Name of Our God

MILTON C. WILCOX

"WHAT'S in a name?" runs the oft-quoted question. And we may reply, Nothing in many; but there is everything good in the name, the covenant name, of our God.

There are different terms used to express his deity, such as God, Lord, Almighty, Eternal, Jehovah. It is the distinctive name of the one God that we wish to study in this article.

one be exceedingly careful not to unsettle minds in regard to those things that God has ordained for our prosperity and success in advancing his cause.

What Hath God Wrought!

"The work is soon to close. The members of the church militant who have proved faithful will become the church triumphant. In reviewing our past history, having traveled over every step of advance to our present standing, I can say, Praise God! As I see what the Lord has wrought, I am filled with astonishment and with confidence in Christ as leader. We have nothing to fear for the future, except as we shall forget the way the Lord has led us, and his teaching in our past history. We are now a strong people, if we will put our trust in the Lord; for we are handling the mighty truths of the Word of God. We have everything to be thankful for. If we walk in the light as it shines upon us from the living oracles of God, we shall have large responsibilities, corresponding to the great light given us of God."—General Conference Bulletin, Vol. V, No. 2, pp. 22-24, Jan. 29, 30, 1893.

A. G. DANIELLS.

✻ ✻ ✻

GET THE HABIT

Now while you have your pencil in hand will you read the following list of good habits and check off as many as you can conscientiously subscribe to?

- Get the habit of rising early.
- Get the habit of retiring early.
- Get the habit of eating slowly.
- Get the habit of being punctual.
- Get the habit of being grateful.
- Get the habit of fearing nothing.
- Get the habit of speaking kindly.
- Get the habit of radiating sunshine.
- Get the habit of seeking the sunshine daily.
- Get the habit of speaking correctly.
- Get the habit of pronouncing correctly.
- Get the habit of closing doors gently.
- Get the habit of neatness in appearance.
- Get the habit of self-reliance.
- Get the habit of a forgiving spirit.
- Get the habit of being industrious.
- Get the habit of apprehending no evil.
- Get the habit of anticipating only good.
- Get the habit of always being progressive.
- Get the habit of promptness at meals.
- Get the habit of daily physical exercise.
- Get the habit of being accommodat- ing.
- Get the habit of being a good lis- tener.
- Get the habit of economy.—Nau- tilus.

✻ ✻ ✻

"If at the close of each day we should review the blessings God is bestowing upon us, we would surely be ashamed of our selfishness in render- ing unto him the poor returns we do."

BIBLE STUDIES

THE COMING OF THE LORD — NO. 2

GEORGE B. THOMPSON

SIGNS IN THE HEAVENS

"IN those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory." Mark 13: 24-26.

I am well aware that when atten- tion is directed to certain phenomena which have appeared in the heavenly bodies — sun, moon, and stars — as a fulfilment of prophecy and signs of the end of the world, skeptics begin to cavil, and some begin to look very wise and talk learnedly about scho- lastic research and certain historical evidence which go to show that what has been considered a fulfilment of the Saviour's prophecy is nothing so remarkable after all, nothing particu- larly out of the ordinary, only one of the peculiar yet natural manifesta- tions of nature which have occurred at different periods in the earth's his- tory, and are liable to occur again at any time.

The explanations of these unbeliev- ing and learned skeptics are some- times more wonderful and hard to accept than the phenomenon itself. Suppose some scholar proves that the celestial phenomena — the darkening of the sun, May 19, 1780, the turning of the moon to blood, and the extraor- dinary meteoric shower in 1833 — which we have considered a fulfilment of the divine predictions of our Lord, were nothing out of the ordinary; that the sun was not miraculously darkened, but only obscured by nat- ural causes; that the stars did not fall from heaven, — what then? What foundation have we established? If these signs have not been fulfilled, then the coming of the Lord is not at the door, for the signs are to be seen before the Lord comes. Then if these signs have not appeared, and the day of God is not at the door, then the message announcing the end is not here either, and the numerous signs on land and sea, among the nations and in society, are not really signs of the end, but mere conditions which are here in the usual course of events, and really have no particular signifi- cance. And if this is all so, then we are in the stream of time, without chart or compass, hopelessly lost. Such a line of reasoning destroys our foundation, and gives nothing in its place, and leaves the people of God to grope in darkness and to drift with the tide, with no means of obtaining their reckoning.

"But," says one, "scientists and some ripe Biblical scholars have a very plausible explanation of these occurrences in the heavenly bodies, showing they were not miraculous." Yes, I know they have. They also have an explanation for other things. They explain the flood; and when all the scientific, infidel verbiage is cast aside, the explanation amounts to this: There was no flood. They ex- plain the opening of the Red Sea, and their explanation simplified is that the sea did not open. They explain how the sun stood still in the days of Joshua; and their explanation, after showing that it is contrary to nature for the sun to stop, that its stopping would upset all the laws of gravita- tion and interfere seriously with the machinery of the universe, amounts to this: The sun did not stop, and the Bible is incorrect. According to their ideas, this is much easier to be- lieve than the record made by the in- spired penman.

Higher critics tell us that Jonah was not swallowed by a whale. The throat of a whale, they say, is so con- structed that it will not admit any- thing so large as a man. It is there- fore scientifically impossible for the Bible account to be correct. The ex- planation, therefore, is that Jonah was not in the belly of the whale for three days. Some have an explana- tion for the miraculous incarnation of Christ, and when you accept it, you have lost your Saviour, for ac- cording to their explanation, there is no divine pre-existing Son of God. They have an explanation concern- ing the miracles of Christ, and when you analyze it, to see what they really do mean, it amounts to this: There are no miracles. Such a thing as a mir- acle is impossible, they explain. God works only through natural laws.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the signs which the Saviour said would appear in the heavens, though of an unusual kind, should be ex- plained away, either by denying them altogether, or by assigning the phe- nomena to natural causes.

But the prophecy of the Bible is so explicit as to make the phenomena signs, no matter how they were pro- duced. First, the prophecy tells when the sun was to be darkened — "Imme- diately after the tribulation of those days." The period of tribulation, as we learned in the previous article, closed A. D. 1798, but the tribulation itself, through the power of the Ref- ormation, came to an end about twenty years earlier. The time of the darkening of the sun was there- fore definitely fixed by the prophecy of the Son of God himself centuries before the event took place.

The intensity of the darkness was revealed in the words of the Patmos seer, "The sun became black as sack- cloth of hair." Rev. 6: 12. We might notice other details also, but the foregoing are sufficient for the present.

Now at the very time when the prediction of Jesus said that the sun should be darkened, history records that it was darkened in a most unusual and remarkable manner. We can give only a few extracts from the many at hand:

"The nineteenth of May, 1780, was the memorable dark day. Over New England and some adjacent tracts of New York and Canada, such was the obscuration, that in many places people could not read or dine at midday without candles. It continued several hours, imparting to surrounding objects a tinge of yellow, and awakening in many a breast apprehensions of some impending calamity. All was wrapped in gloom—the birds became silent, domestic fowls retired to their roosts, and the cocks crowed as at break of day. The darkness of the following night was so intense that many who were but a little way from home, on well-known roads, could not without extreme difficulty retrace the way to their own dwellings."—Sketches of the History of New Hampshire, from Its Settlement in 1623 to 1833, by John M. Whiton, p. 144. Concord: Marsh, Capen, and Lyon, 1834; New Hampshire State Library.

"Dark Days: On the 19th of May, 1780, an uncommon darkness took place all over New England, and extended to Canada. It continued about fourteen hours, or from ten o'clock in the morning till midnight. The darkness was so great that people were unable to read common print, or tell the time of the day by their watches, or to dine, or transact their ordinary business without the light of candles. They became dull and gloomy, and some were excessively frightened. The fowls retired to their roosts. Objects could not be distinguished but at a very little distance, and everything bore the appearance of gloom and night."—The Guide to Knowledge, or Repertory of Facts, edited by Robert Sears, p. 428. New York: 1845; Astor Library.

"Dark Day: Refers especially to May 19, 1780, which was very dark in Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey, causing great alarm."—The Universal Cyclopedia, art. "Dark Day." New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1900.

"That the smoke of burning forests cannot be the cause may be rendered very certain by these considerations: First, the cause is not equal to the effect. Had the woods, from the 40th degree of latitude in America to the 50th, been all consumed in a day, the smoke would not have been sufficient to cloud the sun over the territory covered by the darkness on the 19th of May. Any person can judge of this who has seen large tracts of forest on fire. That thirty or forty miles of burning forest should cover five hundred miles with impenetrable darkness, is too absurd to deserve a serious refutation."—A Brief History of Epidemic and Pestilential Diseases; with the Principal Phenomena of the Physical World, Which Precede and Accompany Them, by Noah Webster, in ten volumes, Vol. II, pp. 91-93. Hartford: printed by Hudson and Goodwin, 1799; Lenoir Library, New York.

We are also told by eyewitnesses that the following night the moon, though full, for the most part gave no light, but when visible had the appearance of blood.

Concerning the falling of the stars, the prophecy declares:

"The stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." Rev. 6: 13.

History records a falling of the stars, or a meteoric shower, in exact fulfilment of the prediction of the prophet on Patmos:

"The most sublime phenomenon of shooting stars, of which the world has furnished any record, was witnessed throughout the United States on the morning of the 13th of November, 1833. The entire extent of this astonishing exhibition has not been precisely ascertained; but it covered no inconsiderable portion of the earth's surface. It has been traced from the longitude of 61 deg. in the Atlantic Ocean, to longitude 100 deg. in Central Mexico, and from the North American lakes to the West Indies. It was not seen, however, anywhere in Europe, nor in South America, nor in any part of the Pacific Ocean yet heard from. Everywhere within the limits above mentioned, the first appearance was that of fireworks of the most imposing grandeur, covering the entire vault of heaven with myriads of fireballs, resembling skyrockets. Their coruscations were bright, gleaming, and incessant, and they fell thick as the flakes in the early snows of December. To the splendors of this celestial exhibition the most brilliant skyrockets and fireworks of art bear less relation than the twinkling of the most tiny star to the broad glare of the sun. The whole heavens seemed in motion, and suggested to some the awful grandeur of the Apocalypse, upon the opening of the sixth seal, when 'the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.'—The Geography of the Heavens, Elijah H. Burritt, p. 157. New York: Mason Brothers, 1856.

"The year 1833 is memorable for the most magnificent display on record. . . . At Niagara the exhibition was especially brilliant, and probably no spectacle so terribly grand and solemn was ever before beheld by man as that of the firmament descending in fiery torrents over the dark and roaring cataract. It was observed that the lines of all the meteors if traced back converged in one quarter of the heavens, which was Leonis Majoris; and this point accompanied the stars in their apparent motion westward, instead of moving with the earth towards the east. The source whence the meteors came was thus shown to be independent of the earth's rotation, and exterior to our atmosphere."—The American Cyclopedia, Vol. XI, p. 431, art. "Meteor." New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1883.

"The remarkable exhibitions of shooting stars which have occurred within a few years past, have excited great interest among astronomers, and led to some new views respecting the construction of the solar system. Their attention was first turned towards this subject by the great meteoric shower of November 13th, 1833. On that morning, from two o'clock until broad daylight, the sky being perfectly serene and cloudless, the whole heavens were lighted with a magnificent display of celestial fireworks. At times, the air was filled with streaks of light, occasioned by fiery particles darting down so swiftly as to leave the impression of their light on the eye (like a match ignited and whirled before the face), and drifting to the northwest like flakes of snow driven by the wind; while, at short intervals, balls of fire, varying in size from minute points to bodies large as that of Jupiter and Venus, and in a few instances as large as the full moon, descended more slowly along the arch of the sky, often leaving after them long trains of light, which were, in some instances, variegated with different prismatic colors.

"On tracing back the lines of direction in which the meteors moved, it was found that they all appeared to radiate from the same point, which was situated near one of the stars (Gamma Leonis) of the sickle, in the constellation of Leo; and in every repetition of the meteoric shower of November, the radiant point has occupied nearly the same situation.

"This shower pervaded nearly the whole of North America, having appeared in almost equal splendor from the British possessions on the north to the West India Islands and Mexico on the south, and from sixty-one degrees of longitude east of the American coast, quite to the Pacific Ocean on the west. Throughout this immense region, the duration was nearly the same. The meteors began to attract attention by their unusual frequency and brilliancy, from nine to twelve o'clock in the evening; were most striking in their appearance from two to four, arrived at their maximum, in many places, about four o'clock, and continued until rendered invisible by the light of day."—An Introduction to Astronomy, Denison Olmsted, LL. D., pp. 268, 270. New York: Robert B. Collins, 1854. (See also American Journal of Science, beginning with the twenty-fifth volume; also "Letters on Astronomy," by Denison Olmsted, American Journal of Science, November, 1851.)

Just as history bears silent yet indisputable testimony to the fulfilment of the great lines of prophecy predicting the rise and decline of nations, so here again the voices gathered from the archives of historical records bear testimony to the fulfilment of the words of Jesus that signs of his coming would be seen in the heavens. It does not matter just how the sun was darkened. The method of obscuration is immaterial. The fact remains that it was darkened just when Jesus said it would be. The signs have appeared in sun, moon, and stars, and the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Other signs will be considered next week.

QUESTIONS

1. What claim is made by those who disbelieve in the signs of the Saviour's return?
2. What similar claim is made concerning other Bible doctrines?
3. What signs did the Saviour say would be seen in the heavens?
4. When does history say a remarkable darkening of the sun occurred?
5. When was the moon darkened?
6. When did a remarkable falling of the stars take place?
7. What assurance does this give us?

"THERE doth not live

Any so poor but he may give,
Any so rich but may receive.

"Withhold the very meagrest dole
We can bestow, in part or whole,
And we may stint a starving soul."

THE whole business of the whole church is to preach the whole gospel to the whole world.—J. Campbell White.

BIBLE STUDIES

A Great Prophetic Chapter

A Verse-by-Verse Exposition of Matthew 24

CALVIN P. BOLLMAN

IN addition to asking the Master when the terrible things should occur which he had foretold concerning Jerusalem, the disciples added this question, "And what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" In answer more directly to this latter inquiry, the Saviour foretold a number of signs. And that he did so need not be a matter of surprise to any one. A sign is "any indicative or significant object or event." When on his first voyage of discovery, Columbus picked up at sea a piece of carved wood, and saw land birds in the air, they were signs, or tokens, to him that he was nearing land.

Quite apart from the utterly foolish so-called "signs" which mean nothing and which serve only to foster superstition, there are many signs which have meaning, and which men do well to heed. Christ reproved the Pharisees, saying, "O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" Matt. 16:3.

Signs in the Heavens

During the great Reformation there was a revival of Bible Christianity. And even before that, all along through the centuries when pagans and even overzealous churchmen persecuted the church, there were some who were faithful to God and loyal to his truth, so far as they understood it. But under the work of Luther and others, many more learned to trust the merits of Christ instead of the forms and ceremonies of the papal church. As time passed, however, the Protestant churches too became formal. The work of the Wesleys and others was a protest against this Protestant apostasy. But the drift continued to be in the direction of ease, luxury, and formalism. Then, to arouse a sleeping church, came the first of the signs foretold by our Saviour as heralds of his coming.

Signs in the Sun and Moon

May 19, 1780, the sun was darkened, and the following night the moon gave no light until toward morning, thus fulfilling not only our Saviour's prediction, but also the words of the prophet:

"The sun shall be turned into darkness . . . before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come." Joel 2:31.

These signs, beginning as they did soon after the close of the great tribulation,—even before the twelve hundred and sixty years had expired,—could not be easily mistaken, and served to arouse thousands to a sense of the truth that God's word cannot fail; and that though men may and do forget God, God does not forget them. Our Lord promised certain signs, and at the time foretold—"in those days, after that tribulation"—these signs began to appear, as witnessed in the following excerpts:

Under "dark," subdivision "day," the Standard Dictionary says:

"Any day memorable for great darkness; specifically (U. S. History), May 19, 1780, when an unusual darkness spread over all the New England States."

Webster's New International Dictionary also mentions the same phenomenon, saying:

"Any day characterized by great darkness, . . . especially May 19, 1780, when a remarkable and unexplained darkness extended over all New England."

"The Guide to Knowledge, or Repertory of Facts," edited by Robert Sears, New York, 1845, page 428 (Astor Library), says:

"On the 19th of May, 1780, an uncommon darkness took place all over New England, and extended to Canada. It continued about fourteen hours, or from ten o'clock in the morning till midnight. The darkness was so great that people were unable to read common print, or tell the time of the day by their watches, or to dine, or transact their ordinary business without the light of candles. They became dull and gloomy, and some were excessively frightened. The fowls retired to their roosts. Objects could not be distinguished but at a very little distance, and everything bore the appearance and gloom of night."

The Universal Cyclopedia, D. Appleton & Co., New York, says:

"Dark Day: refers especially to May 19, 1780, which was very dark in Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey, causing great alarm."

"Sketches of the History of New Hampshire," by John M. Whiton, 1834, contains this:

"The nineteenth of May, 1780, was the memorable dark day. Over New England and some adjacent tracts of New York and Canada, such was the obscuration that in many places people could not read or dine at midday without candles. It continued several hours, imparting to surrounding objects a tinge of yellow, and awakening in many a breast apprehensions of some impending calamity. All was wrapped in gloom—the birds became silent, domestic fowls retired to their roosts, and the cocks crowed as at break of day. The darkness of the following night was so intense that many who were but a little way from home, on well-known roads, could not without extreme difficulty retrace the way to their own dwellings."—Page 144. (New Hampshire State Library.)

An account of this phenomenon from still another source gives some very interesting facts not mentioned in the foregoing quotations:

"This strange darkness increased until by noon the people had to light candles to eat their dinners by! Lights were seen in every window, and, out of doors, people carried torches to light their steps. Everything took a different color from what it had by sunlight, and consequently the strange reflections of the torchlights were in keeping with the marvelous and changed appearance of everything. Hosts of people believed the end of the world had begun to come; men dropped to their knees to pray in the field; many ran to their neighbors to confess wrongs and ask forgiveness; multitudes rushed into the meeting houses in towns where they had such, where pious and aged ministers, pleading repentance, interceded with God in their behalf; and everywhere throughout this day of wonder and alarm the once careless thought of their sins and their Maker!

"At this time the legislature of Connecticut was in session, and when the growing darkness became so deep that at midday they could not see each other, most of them were so alarmed as to be unfit for service. At this juncture Mr. Davenport arose and said:

"Mr. Speaker, it is either the day of judgment, or it is not. If it is not, there is no need of adjourning. If it is, I desire to be found doing my duty. I move that candles be brought and that we proceed to business."

"The darkness somewhat increased all day, and before time of sunset was so intense that no object whatever could be distinguished. Anxiously and tremblingly people waited for the full moon to rise at nine o'clock, and even little children with strained eyes sat silently watching for its beautiful beams to appear. But they were disappointed; the darkness being unaffected by the moon. The most feeling prayers ever prayed in Antrim were at the family altars that night. Children never had more tender blessing than these mothers gave them that night. They slept soundly for the most part, but the parents chiefly sat up all night to wait and see if the glorious sun would rise again. Never dawned a lovelier morning than that 20th of May! Never were hearts more thankful on the earth! Even thoughtless people praised God! So much were the whole population affected by this event, that, at the succeeding March meeting, the town voted, March 9, 1781, to keep the next 19th of May as a day of fasting and prayer."—History of the Town of Antrim, New Hampshire, by Rev. W. R. Cochrane, pp. 58, 59. Published by the town, Manchester, N. H., Mirrow Steam Printing Press, 1880. (New Hampshire State Library.)

¹ It is sometimes stated that the legislature adjourned, and again that candles were brought in and that business continued. The fact seems to be that the lower house did adjourn, while the council, or senate, continued in session, doing business by candlelight.

The failure of the moon, which was only one day past the full, is indirectly referred to in the following:

"The darkness varied its appearance in some places, through the afternoon; but in the maritime parts of New Hampshire, there was no cessation or interruption of it; and the evening presented a complete specimen of as total darkness as can be conceived."—The History of New Hampshire, by Jeremy Belknap, A. M., Vol. III, p. 23. Dover, N. H. Printed for O. Crosby and J. Varney, by J. Mann and J. K. Remick, 1812. (New Hampshire State Library.)

The following extract from the "History of Weare," New Hampshire, now in the Boston Public Library, emphasizes some features of this phenomenon not dwelt upon in previous quotations:

"The dark day of New England," so familiar to old and young, came May 19, 1780. The red sun looked down on the earth a short time at early morn; then the clouds rose fast; there was lightning and thunder; rain fell. . . . Near eleven o'clock it began to grow dark, as if night were coming. Men ceased their work; the lowing cattle came to the barns, the bleating sheep huddled by the fences, the wild birds screamed and flew to their nests, the fowls went to their roosts. Soon candles were lighted in all the houses, and men carried torches to guide them in the open air. . . . Men, ordinarily cool, were filled with awe and alarm. Excitable people believed the end of the world had come; some ran about saying the day of judgment was at hand; the wicked hurried to their neighbors to confess wrongs and ask forgiveness; the superstitious dropped on their knees to pray in the fields, or rushed into meeting houses to call on God to preserve them. . . . At night it was so inky dark that a person could not see his hand when held up, nor even a white sheet of paper. The full moon rose at nine o'clock, but not a ray reached the earth. It continued black till about midnight."—Page 276.

The following statements are gleaned from "The Essex Antiquarian," Volume III, pages 53, 54 (Boston Public Library):

"Friday, May 19, 1780, will go down in history as 'the dark day.' In the morning the sun rose clear, but was soon overcast. . . .

"Fear, anxiety, and awe gradually filled the minds of the people. Women stood at the door looking out upon the dark landscape; men returned from their labor in the fields; the carpenter left his tools, the blacksmith his forge, the tradesman his counter. Schools were dismissed, and tremblingly the children fled homeward. Travelers put up at the nearest farmhouse. 'What is coming?' queried every lip and heart. It seemed as if a hurricane was about to dash across the land, or as if it was the day of the consummation of all things.

"Fowls retired to their roosts and went to sleep, cattle gathered at the pasture bars and lowed, frogs peeped, birds sang their evening songs, and bats flew about. But the human knew that night had not come.

"Men prayed, and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom blast of the trumpet shatter
The black sky, that the dreadful face of Christ
Might look from the rent clouds, not as he looked
A loving guest at Bethany, but stern
As Justice and inexorable Law."

"In some places excited persons ran about the streets shouting, 'The day of judgment is at hand!' People asked for forgiveness of each other for wrongs done to them. Others prayed the first and last time.

"Dr. Nathanael Whittaker, pastor of the Tabernacle church in Salem, held religious services in the meeting house, and preached a sermon in which he maintained that the darkness was supernatural. Congregations came together in many other places. The texts for the extemporaneous sermons were invariably those that seemed to indicate that the darkness was consonant with Scriptural prophecy.

"Such texts as these were used: Isa. 13: 10; Eze. 32: 7, 8; Joel 2: 31; Matt. 24: 29, 30; Rev. 6: 12.

"Devout fathers gathered their families around them in their homes and conducted religious services; and for a few hours Christians were stirred to activity, and nonprofessors earnestly sought for salvation, expecting 'to hear the thunder of the wrath of God break from the hollow trumpet of the cloud.'"

Of this remarkable phenomenon and its cause and extent, another annalist says:

"The ignorant indulged in vague and wild conjectures as to the cause of the phenomenon; and those profounder minds, even that could 'gauge the heavens and tell the stars,' were about equally at loss for any rational explanation of the event. . . .

"The extent of the darkness was also very remarkable. It was observed at the most easterly regions of New England; westward, to the farthest parts of Connecticut, and at Albany; to the southward, it was observed all along the seacoasts; and to the north, as far as the American settlements extended. It probably far exceeded these boundaries, but the exact limits were never positively known. . . .

"The above general facts concerning this strange phenomenon were ascertained after much painstaking inquiry, by Professor Williams, of Harvard College, who also collected together some of the more particular observations made in different parts of the country, relative to the remarkable event."—R. M. Devens, in "Our First Century," pp. 89-96. (Boston Public Library.)

So strange and wierd was "the dark day" that it was long a subject of conversation, of essay, and of poem. As showing the lasting impression made by it, witness the following, written by the poet Whittier many years after the event:

"'Twas on a May day of the far old year
Seventeen hundred eighty, that there fell
Over the bloom and sweet life of the spring,
Over the fresh earth and the heaven of noon,
A horror of great darkness, like the night
In day of which the Norland sagas tell,—
The Twilight of the Gods."

"Birds ceased to sing, and all the barnyard fowls
Roosted; the cattle at the pasture bars
Lowd, and looked homeward; bats on leathern wings
Flitted abroad; the sounds of labor died;
Men prayed, and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom blast of the trumpet shatter
The black sky."

More might be quoted from many different sources, all proving not only the very remarkable degree of the darkness both of the day and of the night, but emphasizing also the effect upon the minds of those who witnessed those wonderful phenomena; but space forbids that these excerpts be extended further, for the verses under review demand the mention of still other signs of no less significance than the two which occurred May 19, 1780.

The Great Meteoric Shower

"The stars shall fall from heaven," said the Saviour. The same event was foretold also in Revelation 6: 13:

"The stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind."

Commenting upon Matthew 24: 29, as long ago as 1697, Dr. Thomas Burnet, fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, England, said:

"The last sign we shall take notice of is that of 'falling stars.' 'And the stars shall fall from heaven,' says our Saviour. Matt. 24: 29. We are sure, from the nature of the thing, that this cannot be understood either of fixed stars or planets; for if either of these should tumble from the skies and reach the earth, they would break it all in pieces, or swallow it up as the sea does a sinking ship; and at the same time would put all the inferior universe into confusion. It is necessary, therefore, by these stars, to understand either fiery meteors falling from the middle region of the air, or comets and blazing stars. No doubt there will be all sorts of fiery meteors at that time; and amongst others, those which are called falling stars; which, though they are not considerable singly, yet if they were multiplied in great numbers, falling, as the prophet says, as leaves from the vine, or leaves from the fig tree, they would make an astonishing sight."—"Sacred Theory of the Earth," p. 486.

If the author had been commenting upon the text after the event instead of one hundred thirty-six years before it, he could scarcely have given a better or more accurate description of its fulfilment than this which we have quoted. For on the morning of Nov. 13, 1833, our Saviour's words were literally fulfilled by the greatest meteoric shower this world has ever seen, or probably will see. This shower has been well described as covering "no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface, from the middle of the Atlantic on the east to the Pacific on the west; and from the northern coasts of South America to undefined regions among the British possessions on the north," and everywhere presenting nearly the same appearance.

The Connecticut Observer of Nov. 25, 1833, said:

"We pronounce the raining fire which we saw on Wednesday morning last, an awful type, a sure forerunner, a merciful sign of that great and dreadful day which the inhabitants of the earth will witness when the sixth seal shall be opened. . . . A more correct picture of a fig tree casting its [unripe] fruit when blown by a mighty wind, it is not possible to behold."

The following from a letter written by one astronomer and college professor to another of equal standing in the educational world, will be of interest in this connection:

"Having been engaged in running the standard lines for the general survey of the Chicksaw Nation in Mississippi, I was at the house of Major Allen, on the night of the falling stars. . . . About an hour before daylight, I was called up to see the falling of meteors. It was the most sublime and brilliant sight I had ever witnessed. The largest of the falling bodies appeared about the size of Jupiter or Venus, when brightest. Some persons present, affirmed that they heard a hissing noise on the fall of some of the largest. The sky presented the appearance of a shower of stars, which many thought were real stars, and omen of dreadful events."—Extract from a letter to Prof. Denison Olmsted, of Yale College, from Professor Thompson, "formerly of the University of Nashville, Tenn." Printed in a pamphlet and bound in a volume with the title "Bowditch Pamphlets." (Boston Public Library.)

The Display of 1833 Incomparably the Greatest Ever Seen

"Probably the most remarkable of all the meteoric showers that have ever occurred was that of the Leonids, on the [night following] November 12, 1833. The number at some stations was estimated as high as 200,000 an hour for five or six hours. 'The sky was as full of them as it ever is of snowflakes in a storm,' and, as an old lady described it, looked 'like a gigantic umbrella.' [page 469] . . .

"In 1864 Professor Newton, of New Haven, showed by an examination of the old records that there had been a number of great meteoric showers in November, at intervals of thirty-three or thirty-four years, and he predicted confidently a repetition of the shower on November 13 or 14, 1866. The shower occurred as predicted, and was observed in Europe; and it was followed by another in 1867, which was visible in America, the meteoric swarm being extended in so long a procession as to require more than two years to cross the earth's orbit. Neither of these showers, however, was equal to the shower of 1833.

The researches of Newton, supplemented by those of Adams, the discoverer of Neptune, showed that the swarm moves in a long ellipse with a thirty-three-year period.

"A return of the shower was expected in 1899 or 1900, but failed to appear, though on November 14-15, 1898, a considerable number of meteors were seen, and in the early morning of November 14-15, 1901, a well-marked shower occurred, visible over the whole extent of the United States, but best seen west of the Mississippi, and especially on the Pacific Coast. At a number of stations several hundred Leonids were observed by eye or by photography, and the total number that fell must be estimated by tens of thousands. The display, however, seems to have nowhere rivaled the showers of 1866-67, and these were not to be compared with that of 1833."—"Manual of Astronomy," Charles A. Young, Ph. D., LL. D., Professor of Astronomy in Princeton University, pp. 469, 471, 472. Boston: Ginn and Company, 1902.

Seen as Sign of Second Advent

"I witnessed this gorgeous spectacle, and was awe-struck. The air seemed filled with bright descending messengers from the sky. It was about daybreak when I saw this sublime scene. It was not without the suggestion at that moment that it might be the harbinger of the coming of the Son of man; and in my state of mind I was prepared to hail him as my friend and deliverer. I had read that the stars should fall from heaven, and they were now falling: I was suffering much in my mind, and I was beginning to look away to heaven for the rest denied me on earth."—"My Bondage and My Freedom," Frederick A. Douglass.

Regarded as Sign of End by Many

"Scientific study of the orbits of shooting stars began after the occurrence of the most brilliant meteoric shower on record,—that of November 13, 1833. This spectacle, which excited the greatest interest among all beholders, and was looked upon with consternation by the ignorant, many of whom thought that the end of the world had come, was witnessed generally throughout North America, which happened to be the part of the earth facing the meteoric storm. Hundreds of thousands of shooting stars fell in the course of two or three hours. Some observers compared their number to the flakes of a snowstorm, or to the raindrops in a shower."—The Encyclopedia Americana, art. "Meteors or Shooting Stars." New York: The American Company, 1903.

Many more equally interesting statements might be quoted, but these will suffice, for no one will deny a fact of history so well attested as the great meteoric shower of 1833.

It may be said that the great meteoric shower was a natural phenomenon long since fully explained. Certainly it was, but that does not break the force of the fact that eighteen centuries before the event it was accurately described by our Saviour, and the event itself definitely located as coming after the close of the great tribulation through which the church was to pass, as foretold in verse 21. The Creator uses natural means and common things through which to reveal himself to the children of men. Almost any clear night a meteor or two may be seen, and upon a few occasions scores or even hundreds, or it may be thousands, have appeared, but only upon this one occasion did beholders recognize such a display as the fulfilment of our Saviour's prediction, a harbinger of the day of God.

* * *

SCRIPTURES FOR AFRICA

THE British and Foreign Bible Society has published some part of the Scriptures in one hundred thirty-seven African languages. These include the complete Bible in twenty-two languages, and the complete New Testament in thirty-one more languages. In the continent as a whole about eight hundred recognized languages are spoken, according to the estimate of W. J. W. Roome, secretary of the society for British East Africa.

Time No Longer

N. D. ANDERSON

MEN do not run a telegraph line into a Dismal Swamp, nor construct a railway into a Sahara Desert, to terminate in some scum-covered lagoon or at some naked sand dune. When they build highways, or run lines of communication, to some point, they have a good reason for so doing; there is something to be had or done where the lines and the highways end.

God, too, had a good reason when he constructed the lines of prophecy, and terminated them, trunk and feeders, at a certain point in history. When the angel of Revelation 10 gave forth the fiat, "Time no longer," he had reference to the year 1844. There is no definite time-prophecy that extends beyond 1844. The 2300-day period, the backbone prophecy of Scripture, and the 1335-day period of Daniel 12:12, terminate then. The 1260-day and the 1290-day periods both ended before 1844. The most spectacular of the signs of the times placed at intervals along the road to warn of the approaching end, to apprise the traveler that he is nearing the last station, occurred before 1844,—the "great earthquake," Lisbon, Nov. 1, 1755; the dark day, May 19, 1780; the moon of blood, May 19, 1780; the falling of the stars, Nov. 13, 1833. Some great event or events, some great business of heaven, then, must be located at this point.

It was then that our great High Priest entered the holy of holies in the heavenly sanctuary (Dan. 8:14; Hebrews 9); that the books were opened and the judgment set (Dan. 7:9, 10); that a movement had birth which is destined to spread and grow until it has carried to every nook and corner of the earth, to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, the threefold message which we find recorded in Revelation 14:6-12.

There was great activity at the end of prophetic time, at the terminal of that Biblical road; vast overshadowing events took place there with regard to the work of God in the earth. Stretching out and away from that terminal to earth's horizon, were vast whitening fields bowed over with their weight of grain, awaiting the harvesters; great vineyards of ripening clusters, hanging low to the earth, awaiting the gatherers; untold riches that must be garnered into the Master's barns.

O the solemnity of it! the responsibility for us, the remnant people to whom has been intrusted this earthly harvesting! How the grandeur, the sublimity, the joyousness of it—of God's love, of opportunity for service—should fill our souls, and lift us up and on over every difficulty, every trial, our hearts ringing with the song of Moses and the Lamb!

The Layman's Movement --- No. 2

How Shall We Finish the Work?

ROLLIN D. QUINN

THE all-absorbing question in the minds of God's people today should be, How shall we finish the work, and be prepared for the coming of the Lord Jesus? Years ago we were instructed to study the Acts of the Apostles, and told that light had been given that our work was to be carried on on a higher plane and in a broader way than ever before.

"Why has the history of the work of the disciples, as they labored with holy zeal, animated and vitalized by the Holy Spirit, been recorded, if it is not that from this record the Lord's people today are to gain an inspiration to work earnestly for him? What the Lord did for his people in that time, it is just as essential, and more so, that he do for his people today. All that the apostles did, every church member today is to do, and all are to work with as much more fervor, to be accompanied by the Holy Spirit in as much greater measure, as the increase of wickedness demands a more decided call to repentance."—Testimonies for the Church, Vol. VII, p. 33.

We are asked to study the plans and methods of the apostolic church. We must make their program our program. For thirty years and more there has been urged upon us the need of a great spiritual awakening, a genuine revival among the churches. Volumes VI, VII, VIII, and IX of the Testimonies are full of instruction regarding the part the laity are to act in the finishing of the work. These volumes are full of such statements as this:

"If every church member were a living missionary, the gospel would speedily be proclaimed in all countries, to all peoples, nations, and tongues, and then Christ would come with power and great glory."

There are scores of other statements, very clear and definite, to the effect that before the Lord's coming there will be a mighty awakening on the part of the laymen, such a layman's missionary movement as the earth has never witnessed. Everything in the world about us shows that we have now entered the time when such a powerful movement is due.

We have been told that by studying the book of Acts, we may receive light on our methods of work. Before entering directly into the study of this book, let us notice a few things in the life and labors of our Lord. His first public utterance, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" (Luke 2:49) shows the desire he had to enter upon his great task. A little later, when urged to eat, he said, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." John 4:34. The finishing of the work seemed to be the supreme thought in his mind at that time. In his prayer, recorded in John 17, at the conclusion of his final discourse, he said, "I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do." Verse 4. And again, upon Golgotha, after he had summoned his fast-waning strength to pray for his enemies and to save the poor thief, he cried with a loud voice, "It is finished!" That was the shout of a conqueror. Finished the long list of prophecies, which closed turns in the prison," he said, "will put all that out of your head." But the lad insisted that he must see the general in command.

"Very well," said the captain at last. "I will report it."

This he did. The general came up from Marseilles, quite a journey. There was an inspection parade, the general inspecting the troops. Then on the parade ground, surrounded by his officers, the general called for our young brother. The lad came, and as he told again the story of his faith, and of his feeling that he must be loyal to his God, again his heart was stirred with emotion and he wept.

The general, who was a large, tall man, laid his hand upon the young man in a fatherly way and said, "Now, my boy, look up and tell us. What is it?" So the boy, with his emotion calmed, bore witness to his faith, explaining his position, and the Bible teaching, and about the law of God and the fourth commandment. "My officer," he said, "says that I must work on the Sabbath, but God forbids me to do it. That is why I cannot work on the Sabbath. It is because I must obey God, whatever comes."

The general was much interested. He listened carefully, and he thought seriously of the matter. At last he told our young brother not to worry; that he should have the Sabbath free. Then the general turned to the officers and said, "Here is a young man who has religious conviction. It is something that we do not have; but he has it. He is to be respected for it; and he is to have always his Sabbath free from work."

W. A. S.

The Meaning of the Times

F. A. COFFIN

"YE can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?"

This question was addressed by Christ to the most enlightened men of the Jewish nation. They had come to Him asking for more definite, specific, convincing evidence that He was indeed the Son of God. "He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red. And in the morning, It will be foul weather today: for the sky is red and lowering." Then followed the significant query, "Ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" (See Matt. 16:1-3.)

Christ had given that generation every opportunity to know Him as the Sent of God. He had come at the exact time foretold in prophecy, He had fed the hungry, healed the sick, raised the dead, inspired the despondent and heartbroken with courage and hope, and fulfilled in detail every word the prophets of God had spoken concerning Him. (See Dan. 9:25; Mark 1:15.) His daily life bore testimony to His divinity; but envy, jealousy, and blind prejudice prevented many leading men from acknowledging His claims. He was "despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." Nevertheless, the abundant evidence of His divinity left the Jewish nation without excuse.

If the Pharisees of old were without excuse when they rejected Christ, much more is the present generation, for today the entire Bible is in the hands of the common people. It has been translated into nearly every tongue, and is found in every land. All who will, may read the words of the ancient prophets, written centuries before the birth of the Lord, foretelling the exact time and place of His birth, the flight into Egypt of Joseph and Mary with the infant Saviour, His life of patient, loving ministry to suffering humanity, the time and manner of His death, and His resurrection. Jesus' earthly life confirmed in every detail the utterances of the Bible prophets.

Christ's claims are still before the world, and though attacked by infidels and skeptics for generations, they have never been successfully refuted. The Word of God presents ample proof that Jesus was and is all He claimed to be,—the Son of God, the Saviour of men, sent into the world to seek and to save that which was lost through sin.

But faith in Christ means more, far more, than the mere acknowledgment of a historic personage. He lived a Man among men; He died upon the cruel cross, paying with His own precious life the penalty for the sins of the world; but He rose again from the grave, and ascended to His Father, where "He ever liveth to make intercession" for us. As of old, so today "He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him." He is able to forgive sin; He is able to convert the heart; He is able to give peace and comfort in the midst of sorrow and affliction; He is able in life and at death to inspire the heart with hope; and He is able in the glad resurrection morning, at His second coming, to give life to every soul that trusts in Him.

Yes, Jesus is really coming again. His coming is just as certain as the fact that He arose from the dead and ascended to heaven, and that fact is established beyond question. The testimony of the disciples is explicit: "He showed Himself alive after His passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." The word of the apostle Paul is that "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried, and that He rose again the third day according to the Scriptures: and that He was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve: after that, He was seen of above five hundred brethren at once. . . . After that, He was seen of James; then of all the apostles. And last of all," adds Paul, "He was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time." 1 Cor. 15:3-8. Thus with all confidence the apostles spoke of His resurrection. They knew whereof they spoke, and nearly all of the twelve laid down their lives for their faith.

Testimony concerning the ascension is equally explicit: "I ascend," said the Lord Himself, "unto My Father, and your Father; and to My God, and your God." "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto Myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."

"If I go, . . . I will come again." His return is as certain as His going. Of that grand event the prophets of God have delighted to speak. Over and over again it is emphasized in the Scriptures, and all are exhorted to prepare for it.

But how will He come? Will it be as before, to walk as a man among men? Oh, no. "Behold, He cometh with clouds," says the beloved John, "and every eye shall see Him." Angels of God at the ascension declared to the disciples, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." When He ascended, a cloud received Him out of their sight. "In like manner," with a cloud of glory, He will return. He Himself said to the disciples, as they surrounded Him upon the Mount of Olives, "Then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Luke 21:27.

"He comes not an infant in Bethlehem born,
He comes not to lie in a manger;
He comes not again to be treated with scorn,
He comes not a shelterless stranger;
He comes not again to Gethsemane,
To weep and sweat blood in the garden;
He comes not again to die on the tree,
To purchase for rebels a pardon,
Oh, no; glory, bright glory,
Enviours Him now."

Glory, bright glory! "He is like a refiner's fire." Who then shall be able to stand when He appears? Some will stand, for the Lord's promise is, "I will . . . receive you." (See Isa. 55:6, 7; John 14:3.) Others, unready, will fall, for it is written again, "A fire shall devour before Him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about Him." Ps. 50:3.

"The kings of the earth, and the great men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of His wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" Rev. 6:15-17.

This will indeed be the crisis of the ages. This will be the end of earth's midnight of sin and woe. It will be the glorious morning of deliverance to all who put their trust in Christ. For nineteen long centuries, nay, since sin first entered the world, God's people have looked forward to that day with longing, and have approached the darkness of the tomb with the bright hope of the resurrection morning, for of that day we read, "The dead in Christ shall rise." That will be a day of glad reunion; a day when family ties, severed by death, shall be reunited; when the loved of earth, cruelly parted, shall love once more. Sounding still are the words of the Lord to the beloved John: "I am He that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." Rev. 1:18.

But when will this glad morning come, when all the sins and woes, the pains and perils, the hardships and heartaches and miseries of this present evil world shall have an end? What tokens does Heaven give of man's soon release from the bondage of this world? When may we look for the Lord from heaven?

Christ's answer to the Pharisees rings forth, "Ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" Again, He said:

"Now learn a parable of the fig tree: When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things [signs which Christ had enumerated], know that it [the Lord's coming] is near, even at the doors." Matt. 24:32, 33.

Jesus had been saying to His disciples that there would be "signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars," and that "upon the earth" "great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences;" "distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Luke 21:11, 25, 26.

Christ had been saying that just before He should come the second time, the world would be like Sodom for wickedness, and as unmindful as was the antediluvian world of its impending doom. The same thought is emphasized by the apostle Paul, who declared that to the end of time "evil men and seducers" should "wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." 2 Tim. 3:13.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." 2 Tim. 3:1-5.

Were these the only scriptures depicting last-day conditions, we might conclude that it would be a time of great ignorance, a period of intellectual darkness. But not so, for paradoxical as it may seem, the Bible points to the period just before Christ's second coming as a time of great enlightenment. The prophets of old foretold that in "the time of the end" many should "run to and fro," and knowledge should be increased; that in the time of the Lord's preparation, the "chariots" should be like "flaming torches," and should "jostle one against another in the broad ways." Dan. 12:4; Nahum 2:3-5.

Furthermore, amid great intellectual advancement and great wickedness; amid love of pleasure and forgetfulness of God; amid gilded sin and blind unbelief; amid form and ceremony and cant and hypocrisy, the gospel of the kingdom, said Christ, would be "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Not that all will be saved, but that all will be urgently invited to turn to God.

This is the picture of the last days presented in the faithful Word. Is it not a portrayal of the days in which we live? Are these not times of pleasure seeking, and greed, and hate, and deception, and "distress of nations, with perplexity"?

Testimony is abundant that the signs in the sun, moon, and stars, which Christ foretold, already have appeared. It was on May 19, 1780, that the sun was darkened and the moon obscured in a most mysterious manner; and on Nov. 13, 1833, that the stars fell from heaven. For hours the sky was as full of blazing meteors as it is of snowflakes during a snowstorm. The poet Whittier, describing the dark day in his poem, "Abraham Davenport," said:

"'Twas on a May day of the far old year
Seventeen hundred eighty, that there fell
Over the bloom and sweet life of the spring,
Over the fresh earth and the heaven of noon,
A horror of great darkness. . . .
Birds ceased to sing, and all the barnyard fowls
Roosted; the cattle at the pasture bars
Low'd, and look'd homeward; bats on leathern wings
Flitted abroad; the sounds of labor died;
Men pray'd, and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom blast of the trumpet shatter
The black sky."

Who can say that the signs upon the earth have not also been seen? Since the event described by Whittier, the ocean steamship has come, and the steam train has come, and the automobile has come, and flight by air has come, and the world-wide wireless telephone and telegraph have come, and the Martinique disaster has come, and the San Francisco earthquake and fire have come, and the sinking of the "Titanic" has come, and the Great War has come, and the influenza scourge has come, and the famines and pestilences of Russia and China have come, and the great Japanese earthquake has come, and the financial chaos of Europe has come, and the burning of Smyrna has come, and the multi-millionaire has come, and the trade union has come, and the movie craze has come, and the dance of death has come, and the worldliness of the church has come.

Many are running to and fro. Knowledge has been increased. The times are perilous. The sea and the waves have indeed been roaring. Earthquakes have come in many places, and famines and pestilences. Evil men have become worse and worse. Covetousness bears sway. Men love pleasure and are indifferent toward God.

Truly, we are in the last of the last days. It is high time to discern not only the signs of summer or of winter or of the weather, but the significant signs of the Lord's return. Are you ready for that day? God is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance;" but "He will not always chide: neither will He keep His anger forever." To those who persistently refuse His gracious offer of mercy, He declares, "Behold, the Lord cometh out of His place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity." Isa. 27:21.

There is opportunity now to make our "peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. 5:1. The day will soon come when it will be too late. That will be a day of sorrow to the finally impenitent, but of great joy to all who have sought righteousness and found God; for—

"He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of His people shall He take away from off all the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it.

"And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for Him, we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation." Isa. 25:8, 9.

The Secret of Success

D. H. KRESS, M. D.

"THIS one thing I do." Phil. 3:13. The great good accomplished by the apostle Paul may be ascribed to the fact that he refused to be sidetracked. He had but one objective, and would not permit himself to be turned from it to the right hand or to the left.

"A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways." James 1:8. Lacking in stability, he is a failure. Men who succeed in life are those who give themselves unreservedly to the doing of one thing.

Not long ago a man informed me that he had spent $70,000 in his study and research work in connection with perfecting cement for building purposes. It is needless to say, he has made a success of his work. He has more than ninety different patents on cement constructions. His counsel is everywhere sought for.

In business, no one succeeds unless he gives himself wholly and unreservedly to it. This is well understood by business men. It is held out as the great secret of success by those who train young men for business activities.

The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light. What applies to business applies with equal force to the doing of God's work. No man is crowned, "except he strive lawfully," or recognizes this fundamental law.

Peter was called from the fish nets to become a fisher of men. He undoubtedly was a good fisherman, and made a success of his work. Had he not, I doubt whether he would have received the call. Men who fail in temporal matters are most likely to fail in God's work, should they enter it. The men whom Jesus called to follow Him were doing things. The time came in the experience of Peter, as it will in the experience of all who engage in religious work, when things went hard and looked unpromising and disappointing. Naturally, he began to think of his former occupation and the success he had in it. He reasoned, as others since have done, that he could do the work to which he had had a divine call, and carry forward his work of fishing at the same time. He thought he could take this as a side line, to aid him in his work of soul-saving. No doubt others could have engaged in the fishing business and used it as an aid in doing spiritual work, but not Peter. He had been called away from that work, and sacredly set apart to another. But in mercy the Lord did not now give him success in his fishing business. All night he toiled, and "caught nothing." Jesus appeared to the discouraged disciples and said, "Children, have ye any meat?" They answered, "No." Then He told them, "Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find. They cast therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes." John 21:3, 5, 6.

When they came to shore, Jesus said to them, "Come and dine." There before them were bread and fish sufficient for their needs. Evidently the lesson He designed to teach them was that He was able to supply their needs, and therefore there never could be an excuse for them to turn away from the work to which they had been called. To it they were to give their undivided attention. They were to make first things first, or to seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, believing that all these temporal necessities would be added.

Turning to Peter, Jesus said, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me? He saith unto Him, Yea, Lord; Thou knowest that I love Thee. He saith unto him, Feed My sheep," "feed my Lambs." John 21:16, 15. This is the work to which he had before been called. Peter never forgot this lesson. Ever after he gave himself to the doing of this one thing, and wonderful were the results. A power now attended his message which led men, convicted by the Holy Spirit, to cry, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Acts 2:37.

But conditions arose, after believers had multiplied, which threatened to draw Peter away from his work of ministry to look after temporal matters, a work important for some one to do, but not for Peter. He saw how circumstances were shaping up, and said, "It is not reason that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables. Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word." Acts 6:2-4.

Even the Lord's business was not the work for Peter. That work was to be left for others to do. To engage in speculative business was unthinkable for Peter. This decision on the part of the apostles marked a new era in the work of God. Marvelous were the results that followed the ministry of the word from that time.

Our Lord's Great Prophecy

"Tell us, when shall these things be?" Matthew 24:3.

Thoughts on Matthew 24:29-31

CALVIN P. BOLLMAN

"IMMEDIATELY after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Matt. 24: 29, 30.

In this scripture there is reference made again to the great tribulation foretold by our Saviour in words recorded in verses 21, 22, briefly commented upon in our study of two weeks ago. To refresh our memories we will quote those verses again, thus:

"Then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

It seems clear that the great tribulation of these verses is the same as that foretold in Daniel 7: 24, 25, reading as follows:

"The ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings. And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time."

This time period, as we have seen, began A. D. 538 and ended in 1798. As this entire period was just 1260 years, it could not be shortened as to time, but while as a whole it was a period signalized by the most bitter and cruel persecution ever experienced by the church of God, the days, or years, of actual, wearing persecution were shortened, that is, in the providence of God the persecution was not permitted to continue in its greatest severity during this entire time. Indeed, as a matter of fact, so far as any general persecution was concerned, it ceased about the time of the American Declaration of Independence, twenty-two years before the end of the days.

And in this comparatively short interval — of a little less than twenty-two years — certain signs of the approaching end of the gospel age were to be ushered in. "Immediately after the tribulation of those days," writes Matthew, "shall the sun be darkened," etc. As recorded by Mark, our Lord's words were:

"In those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory." Mark 13: 24-26.

Luke gives still more details, thus:

"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Luke 21: 25-27.

Not all these signs were to be seen "in those days," but beginning "in those days, after that tribulation," they were to continue, and they will continue, until the signs merge into the events of which they are the harbingers, the coming of our Lord in the clouds of heaven.

Of these signs, three are many years in the past, namely, the darkening of the sun and of the moon, and the falling of the stars. Of the first of these phenomena, an eyewitness testified briefly as follows:

"The 19th of May, 1780, was unprecedented in New England for its great darkness. . . . The darkness extended over several thousand square miles, though differing much in intensity in different places. Nowhere, perhaps, was it greater than in this vicinity. The day was appropriately called and is still known as The Dark Day."—"History of the Town of Hampton, New Hampshire," Joseph Dorr, Salem, Mass., Vol. I, p. 217.

Of the same event, in his poem, "Abraham Davenport," John G. Whittier wrote:

"'Twas on a May day of the far old year
Seventeen hundred eighty, that there fell
Over the bloom and sweet life of the spring,
Over the fresh earth and the heaven of noon,
A horror of great darkness. . . .
Men prayed, and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom blast of the trumpet shatter
The black sky, that the dreadful face of Christ
Might look from the rent clouds, not as He looked
A loving guest at Bethany, but stern
As Justice and inexorable Law."

An account of this event under "Explanatory and Pronouncing Vocabulary," Webster's Dictionary, edition of 1869, is given thus:

"The Dark Day, May 19, 1780 — so called on account of a remarkable darkness on that day extending over all New England. In some places, persons could not see to read common print in the open air for several hours together. Birds sang their evening songs, disappeared, and became silent; fowls went to roost; cattle sought the barnyard; and candles were lighted in the houses. The obscuration began about ten o'clock in the morning, and continued till the middle of the next night, but with differences of degree and duration in different places. For several days previous, the wind had been variable, but chiefly from the southwest and the northeast. The true cause of this remarkable phenomenon is not known."

Many other statements might be quoted, but these must suffice.

The failure of the moon which had full only the day before, is indirectly referred to as follows:

"The darkness varied in its appearance in some places, through the afternoon; but in the maritime parts of New Hampshire there was no cessation or interruption of it; and the evening presented a complete specimen of as total darkness as can be conceived."—"History of New Hampshire," by Jeremy Belknap, A. M., Vol. III, p. 23.

Another testimony to the unusual darkness of the night is given on page 276 of the "History of Weare, New Hampshire," in these words:

"The dark day of New England, so familiar to old and young, came May 19, 1780. The red sun looked down on the earth a short time at early morn; then the clouds rose fast; there was lightning and thunder, rain fell. . . . Near eleven o'clock it began to grow dark, as if night were coming. Men ceased their work, and lowing cattle came to the barns, the bleating sheep huddled by the fences, the wild birds screamed and flew to their nests, the fowls went to their roosts. Soon candles were lighted in all the houses, and men carried torches to guide them in the open air. . . .

(Concluded on page 14)

IN Capernaum, Palestine, an old synagogue has recently been unearthed by the Danish scholar, Dr. Sommerfeld.

As reported by the Federal Council of Churches, the total Protestant church membership in the United States is 48,224,014.

DENMARK is divided into 330 communes, 270 of which are in favor of prohibition, and in only 60 are the majority of voters in favor of alcohol.

THE New Testament in Modern Greek was prohibited in Greece until the country became a republic. The republican authorities have now exempted it from all customs duties at the ports of Greece.

ST. MARTIN'S CATHEDRAL at Canterbury, England, has been used for religious gatherings for more than 1,500 years, thus being the oldest building in the world that has been uninterruptedly used for church purposes.

Thoughts on Matthew 24:29-31

(Concluded from page 7)

"Men, ordinarily cool, were filled with awe and alarm. Excitable people believed the end of the world had come; some ran about saying the day of judgment was at hand; the wicked hurried to their neighbors to confess wrongs and ask forgiveness; the superstitious dropped on their knees to pray in the fields, or rushed into meeting houses to call on God to preserve them. . . . At night it was so inky dark that a person could not see his hand when held up, nor even a white sheet of paper. The full moon rose at nine o'clock, but not a ray reached the earth. It continued black till about midnight."

Concerning the third of these celestial signs, namely, the falling of the stars, Dr. Thomas Burnett, commenting on Matthew 24:29, wrote as follows in a book published in England in 1697:

"The last sign we shall take notice of, is that of 'falling stars.' 'And the stars shall fall from heaven,' says our Saviour. Matt. 24:29. We are sure, from the nature of the thing, that this cannot be understood either of fixed stars or planets; for if either of these should tumble from the skies and reach the earth, they would break it all in pieces, or swallow it up, as the sea does a sinking ship; and at the same time would put all the inferior universe into confusion. It is necessary, therefore, by these stars, to understand either fiery meteors falling from the middle region of the air, or comets and blazing stars. No doubt there will be all sorts of fiery meteors at that time; and amongst others, those which are called falling stars; which, though they are not considerable singly, yet if they were multiplied in great numbers, falling, as the prophet says, as leaves from the vine, or leaves from the fig tree, they would make an astonishing sight."—Sacred Theory of the Earth, book 3, p. 66, 3d edition, 1697.

The following account of what was actually seen, more than a century after Dr. Burnett's book was published, shows how strikingly our Lord's words were fulfilled:

"Scientific study of the orbits of shooting stars began after the occurrence of the most brilliant meteoric shower on record,—that of November 13, 1833. This spectacle, which excited the greatest interest among all beholders, and was looked upon with consternation by the ignorant, many of whom thought that the end of the world had come, was witnessed generally throughout North America, which happened to be the part of the earth facing the meteoric storm. Hundreds of thousands of shooting stars fell in the course of two or three hours. Some observers compared their number to the flakes of a snowstorm, or to the raindrops in a shower."—The Encyclopedia Americana, art. "Meteors or Shooting Stars."

As before remarked, the signs in the heavens are long in the past, but today we are seeing, as Luke expresses it, "upon the earth distress of nations; with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

The last ten years have been an era of the greatest war, the greatest famine, the greatest earthquake, the greatest visitation of a plague, and the greatest storms ever known in human history. Every earthly refuge seems to be failing. Civilization itself is going to pieces, and on every side men's hearts are filled with fear of those things which are so rapidly coming upon the earth.

Verse 31 gives us a most wonderful word-picture of the gathering of God's people when the Saviour appears, for, as the apostle Paul writes:

"The Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trumpet of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4:16, 17.

From all over the earth they come, from city marts, from ocean depths, from sun-parched plains, from arctic wastes, from mountain fastnesses, from royal courts,—they come from east and west, north and south,—come to sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God. Let us each, reader and writer, ask himself, Shall I be there?

* * *

Europe in 1925

(Concluded from page 2)

We had feared that after the war a reaction would set in, so that people would become more indifferent and less willing to attend meetings and to study our literature, but this does not seem to be the case. On the contrary, our ministers are preaching everywhere in Europe to crowded houses. We see that, as stated in the spirit of prophecy, even in the darkest places "men and women are looking wistfully to heaven" for light and salvation. People seem more eager than ever to hear the prophecies explained, and to study this time in the light of Bible prophecy. Our ministers report from almost every land that their greatest trouble is that the halls are too small.

Brother T. Tobiassen, president of the Norway Conference, is conducting a series of lectures in Oslo (formerly Christiania), the capital, this winter. With from 1,300 to 1,500 present every night, he has the largest attendance that we have ever had in public meetings in Scandinavia since the days when Elder Matteson first came to Norway in 1878.

In London our ministers are having the same experience. Two of our preachers there speak every week to audiences ranging from 2,000 to 2,500. In many places our evangelists fill large halls seating a thousand or more people, almost without any advertising. Up in Helsingfors, Finland, in January, Elder A. Rintala, the conference president, rented the largest hall in the city for a lecture on the second coming of Christ. More than 4,000 people came out to hear—far too many for the hall. When there is a church where we conduct public meetings, the brethren organize themselves into prayer bands, invite their neighbors, and do everything else in their power to strengthen the hands of the preachers and to bring people to the meetings. This makes for success. Evangelism on a large scale,—preaching this message in the power of God's Spirit to the multitudes and winning thousands to Christ,—that is now our supreme task. It is the loud cry of the third angel's message.

The Second Coming of Christ

The Manner of His Coming and Signs Which Show His Coming Near

GEORGE W. WELLS

Who can look out upon the world today and not conclude that we stand in need of some masterful hand, some saving power? It appears that not only nations, but civilization itself, has been drawn into a vast entanglement, a great Gordian knot, in which ten thousand conflicting interests are tied. They are so locked and interlocked that the fingers of human wisdom can never unravel them. Men, nations, and churches have armed themselves with shibboleths, and play with great abstractions and meaningless terms in their endeavor to build up some mighty superstructure. But how soon it crumbles and falls when confronted with the really tremendous issues of our times.

Men Are Questioning

Men are asking today, What is it that will bring this world tragedy to a conclusion? Where is the power that can deal with the situation? What is it that will break the terrible power of sin over men, and bring its cruel reign to an end? What is it that will liberate us from these mighty world entanglements? What only can breathe hope and new life into the hearts of a world confronted on every side with national strife and sin and suffering, and where death has dominion over every living thing?

From every human viewpoint the picture is a dark one, and earnest, thinking men must be conscious all the time of their need of a higher power than that which man has to give. It is a sad fact that many who once had faith in the Holy Scriptures as the only true source of light and help, are losing confidence in them, and also in Christianity and the leadings of divine Providence. Surely this is an age of peril and calamity; every soul is being tested.

God Keeps Account With the Nations

There is no greater mistake made by Christian people today than that of neglecting to take seriously and to study earnestly the prophetic utterances of God's Word. This neglect is due in part to the popular impression that prophecy is too obscure and difficult to comprehend. We do well, however, to bear in mind that God inspired the prophets to write; and we should be careful how we charge Him with the folly of giving to mankind a revelation which is beyond their comprehension, and unworthy of their highest regard and earnest study. It seems to me that at such a time as this we should turn to God's Word, and seek counsel of Him "in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." Col. 2:3.

The perplexities of the world are all as an open book to God. This whole situation we face today, is but the fulfilment of divine prophecy. The blessed Lord long ago outlined in His Word the program that both people and nations would follow; and today the signs of the times declare that we are standing on the very threshold of the most solemn and fast-closing events.

The present times should be of overwhelming interest to all living. The complicated conditions in human affairs in the world are under divine control. Amid all the strife and tumult of nations, the revolution, revolt, and upheaval in politics, in society, and in religion, it is comforting to know that our God, who "sitteth between the cherubim," still guides and reigns.

As one watches the relation that exists among the nations, it is not difficult to observe that intensity is taking hold of every earthly element. The world is surely on the verge of a stupendous crisis. The Bible, and the Bible only, gives us a correct view of these things. The prophecies of God's Word which unite the chain of events link after link, from eternity in the past to eternity in the future, tell us where we are in the series, and what we may expect in the near future. All that prophecy has foretold as coming to pass, until now, has been clearly traced on the pages of history, and we may be assured that all that is yet to come will be fulfilled in its order.

The Sure Word of Prophecy

If we were left to be guided by the wisdom of this world, by the reasoning of philosophers, statesmen, or economists, the boldest heart would despair. But, thank God, there is a beacon light of hope,—not a hope, however, brought about, as some would have us believe, through the gateway of politics, social reform, or any other human devising. There is only one gleam of light to which the heartsick, weary, worn, and despondent souls of earth may turn to find hope today. The only way out of the perils of this time is the way of the cross and the gospel light, and the apostle Peter, seeking to brighten our hopes and to turn our attention to the certainty of gospel light, says:

"We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of His majesty." "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts." 2 Peter 1:16, 19.

The fulfilment of divine predictions indicates with all clearness and certainty that we are living on the very border of the eternal world, and the next supreme event will be the ushering in of "the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." Titus 2:13.

As we take a view of the situation in the world today, through the eyes of divine prophecy, it becomes evident that the present conditions are clearly foretold in God's Book. Every inspired writer from Moses to John shows us in language easily understood that God's love is infinite, that His kingdom of light and glory is near at hand, and that Jesus is soon coming. Holy men of all ages have looked forward to the advent of our Lord in glory as the consummation of their hopes, and every loyal intelligence in the universe of God is laboring with intense earnestness to hasten that glad day; for when it is realized, it will not only be the grand climax of prophecy and the end of human history, but it will also bring to a close the terrible drama of sin.

A Fundamental Doctrine and a Glorious Truth

Upon examination of the Sacred Scriptures, it will be observed that it is just as necessary to the success of the plan of salvation and redemption for the Lord of glory to come the second time as it was for Him to appear at His first advent. What a pathetic picture Christ would present in the history of the human race and before the universe of God, if, after all His claims and promises, the world should see Him last of all hanging on the cross as a malefactor or laid a lifeless form in Joseph's tomb! True, indeed, He was "despised and rejected of men," but "we, according to His promise," look for Him "the second time." Isa. 53:3; 2 Peter 3:13; Heb. 9:28.

The second coming of Christ is a fundamental doctrine of the Holy Scriptures; but it is more than a mere Bible doctrine to be believed, it is a glorious truth, an impending event, something that is to take place on the earth. It will be the most all-transcending event that ever arrested the interest and attention of mankind. It is not a mere dream of ignorant and wild fanaticism, nor a question of theological speculation: but in verity and truth it is a divinely revealed and recorded Bible promise and fact. The return of our Lord has been the hope of God's covenant-keeping people in all ages. Enoch, who walked with God, looked forward to the return of the Lord in glory, and he, "the seventh from Adam," prophesied, saying, "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of His saints." Jude 14.

Promise by Prophet and King

Job's confidence concerning that day and the certainty of seeing a personal Christ was expressed in clear terms:

"I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." Job 19:25, 26.

David, the sweet singer of Israel, said:

"Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before Him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about Him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that He may judge His people. Gather My saints together unto Me: those that have made a covenant with Me by sacrifice." Ps. 50:3-5.

The gospel prophet seeks to comfort the hearts of the feeble with his cheering message, for he says:

"Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; He will come and save you." Isa. 35:4.

About this supreme event cluster the glories of that "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began." Acts 3:21.

The blessed Lord, when He was about to take His departure from this world, left these comforting promises for His disciples, saying:

"Let not your heart be troubled. . . . In My Father's house are many mansions. . . . I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto Myself." John 14:1-3.

Again He says:

"When the Son of man shall come in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him, then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory: and before Him shall be gathered all nations." Matt. 25:31, 32.

And the angels who lingered upon the mount after Christ's ascension, exclaimed to the sorrowing and bewildered disciples:

"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." Acts 1:11.

The great apostle testified:

"The Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God." 1 Thess. 4:16.

And John from Patmos cries:

"Behold, He cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see Him." Rev. 1:7.

As a Thief Upon the Ungodly

Christ, with prophetic eye, traced with His disciples the scenes that would take place in the last generation. He knew full well that the final crisis would come and steal gradually upon the world, and earnestly He has warned us, lest that day come upon us unawares. He pointed out specific events that were to precede His coming, marking the time well, that we may know that His coming is near, "even at the doors," and He says:

"If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." Rev. 3:3.

To all who make this world their one interest, the day of God will come as a prowling thief, and there is grave danger that even God's children will be caught in the snare and found unready, for the Master exhorted them:

"Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." Luke 21:34.

In the instruction given by the Lord, He surely does not bring to view a temporal millennium, a thousand years in which to prepare for eternity. No flattering signs of peace, spiritual advancement, or millennial glory are intimated; for He says:

"As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt. 24:37-39.

Great Spiritual Decadence

To learn how it was in the days of Noah, we have but to read Genesis 6:5:

"God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually."

The antediluvians turned a deaf ear to God's warning message given by Noah, the "preacher of righteousness," and followed their own unholy imaginations. They filled the earth with violence, and because of their ungodly deeds and continual wickedness they were destroyed.

How is it today? Are not the inhabitants of earth following the same path? Our old world has gone into moral bankruptcy. The transgressors of God's law are fast filling up their cup of iniquity, and the earth with violence. With society adrift, and the home life and proper training of children practically gone, how can we expect anything else but increase of moral decay and corruption? It is evident that men and women today are giving themselves up to dissipation and lustful practices, to gambling and every sort of amusement that appeals to and gratifies the baser elements of mankind.

The Saviour said, "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." Matt. 24:12. One of the most serious things in the present state of society is the unbelief and low standards in the churches. The professed followers of the Lord are fast yielding to the spirit of worldliness. The love of sinful pleasure has taken possession of their hearts. They mingle with the world in its reckless and godless sports. Many are drawn away after worldly associates and fashionable dress, and the spirit of commercialism and gain is working the ruin of others. Cruel criticism, wicked gossip, alienation, and sometimes bitterness have brought great leanness of soul and lack of spiritual power into the church.

"Be Ye Also Ready"

There are certain events and foreshadowing conditions in the world spoken of in the inspired Word of God that are sure harbingers of the supreme and all-glorious event yet to come. The people of God are to know the times—the meaning of passing events. The Word of God makes clear to them that which is mysterious to others, even as the ancient Israelites who followed their Lord and believed His word had light in their dwellings when the plague of darkness covered the homes of the Egyptians. It was Paul who said:

"Of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, . . . and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober." 1 Thess. 5:1-6.

So the church of Christ is not in darkness concerning this important event. They know not the hour or day of His coming, but they are to know when it is near, "even at the doors."

The second advent of our Lord will be an overwhelming surprise to false teachers and their followers. While they are crying, "Peace and safety," "sudden destruction" will come upon them. The world is being rocked to sleep in godless pleasure and rioting. They are resting in carnal security. At the very time when some are saying, "Where is the promise of His coming?" the signs are fulfilling, and sudden destruction is coming. God's message today is sounding everywhere, "Be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Matt. 24:44. Only those will stand who respond to the call of heaven, and prepare for the coming of their Lord by being sanctified through obedience to the truth and faith in the blessed Christ. The righteous alone will be hidden in that great day.

Speaking of other conditions which exist now and which were to be characteristic of the closing days, the apostle says:

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." 2 Tim. 3:1-6, 13.

All that is set forth in these words concerning the perilous times of these last days, is now being met. There is nothing lacking. All nature groans with the agonies of corruption, decay, and death. The people surely are drunk with wantonness, pleasure, and sin.

The Love of Money the Root of Evil

The apostle James testifies:

"Go to now, ye rich men. . . . Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth. . . . Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton. . . . Ye have condemned and killed the just." James 5:1-6.

How many are sacrificing their conscience, their morality, their virtue, and their obedience to God for the sake of money. Think of the gold and silver that have been heaped together today in the hands of a few. Oh, the greed for money, the love of money, the magic of money! Oh, the rush for money, the hoarding of money, and the envy of money, the jealousy, lying, and stealing of money! When was there ever such oppression for money? All this and more the Scripture tells us marks the time of "the last days" in which we now live.

The Saviour, in making mention of these days, said:

"There shall be . . . upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Luke 21:25, 26.

He said:

"Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places."

He gave a general survey of the history of the church down to the time of His second advent, closing with the remarkable statement:

"He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Matt. 24:13, 14.

He does not say that all the world will be converted, but the glad tidings of the gospel story will be carried as a witness to all nations. Can we not say that today this divine prediction of our Lord is being rapidly fulfilled, and the gospel light is sounding in all the world?

The printing press, the rapid modes of travel, the almost innumerable inventions and facilities for pushing the work forward, and the spirit of evangelism possessing the church, that has led them to enter all fields of the world with the gospel message, have made possible the fulfilment of this prophecy in our day.

Special Signs in the Heavens

The Saviour did not leave His disciples in the dark about the specific question they asked Him, for in reply to their inquiry, "What shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the world?" He said:

"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring." Luke 21:25.

And He marked the time when God would hang out His great signs in the heavens, for we read:

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven." Matt. 24:29.

It will be observed that there are three distinct signs mentioned, namely, the darkening of the sun and of the moon, and the falling of the stars. Turning to the Old Testament, we read:

"I will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come." Joel 2:30, 31.

John the revelator used similar language when he refers to the second return of Christ:

"I beheld when He had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." Rev. 6:12-14.

These Bible writers are in perfect agreement in their testimony, although widely separated in time and place; and they also agree with the divine utterance of the Lord Jesus. It will be observed, however, that the Saviour, in marking the time of these signs as recorded by Mark, was specific, for He said,

"In those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." Mark 13:24.

Surely when these things, in response to divine prophecy, take place, we are fully justified in looking upon them as signs of the approaching end and the coming of the Lord, and in believing that the end of the world is near.

In the exact order of the prophecy and in perfect keeping with the time, came the great dark day of May 19, 1780; and occurring as it did just after the tribulation of the Dark Ages, it meets with wonderful exactness the divine specification. The remarkable darkness of that day still remains a phenomenon, not fully explained by scientists or astronomers, and can be understood only in the light of the prophecies. The sun was totally darkened until its going down, and the following night the moon, although in the full, appeared as a great ball of fire in the heavens.

The Testimony of Eyewitnesses

"In some places, persons could not see to read common print in the open air for several hours together. Birds sang their evening songs, disappeared, and became silent; fowls went to roost; cattle sought the barnyard; and candles were lighted in the houses. The obscuration began about ten o'clock in the morning, and continued till the middle of the next night, but with differences of degree and duration in different places. . . . The true cause of this remarkable phenomenon is not known."—Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, edition 1869, art., "Dark Day."

Herschel, the great astronomer, says:

"The dark day in Northern America was one of those wonderful phenomena of nature which will always be read with interest, but which philosophy is at a loss to explain."

Some fifty years later, Nov. 13, 1833, we had in the eastern part of this country what is known as the most remarkable meteoric shower of shooting stars ever witnessed by the human eye. The very heavens were filled with an unsurpassed celestial glory indescribable.

The celebrated astronomer and meteorologist, Professor Olmsted, of Yale College, says:

"Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13, 1833, probably saw the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the pages of history."

"At Niagara the exhibition was especially brilliant, and probably no spectacle so terribly grand and sublime was ever before beheld by man as that of the firmament descending in fiery torrents over the dark and roaring cataract."—The American Encyclopedia, edition 1881, art., "Meteors."

Christ's Coming in This Generation

To emphasize the importance of these signs and to impress the minds of His followers with the shortness of time, the Saviour further said:

"Now learn a parable of the fig tree: When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." Matt. 24:32-35. "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. . . . So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is at hand. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away: but My words shall not pass away." Luke 21:28-33.

History records in detail the fulfilment of our Lord's great prophecy regarding these signs and world conditions, and we are now unmistakably standing on the border of the eternal world, in the very closing days of the last generation. The last link of this prophecy or unfulfilled portion of Matthew 24 will not fail of an exact and speedy fulfilment. Therefore it is our duty and happy privilege to shape all our affairs so that we may be prepared to meet the blessed Lord at His coming.

There is no possibility of counterfeiting the coming of Christ, for it will be universally known—witnessed by the whole world. The Saviour does not purpose that His believing, faithful children shall be deceived by Satan as to the manner of His second coming. He gives them forewarning, and says:

"There shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. . . . Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, He is in the desert; go not forth; behold, He is in the secret chambers; believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt. 24:24-27.

His coming will not be in secret. The children of God will not be caught up and away by some rapturous light or secret power unbeknown to themselves or the human family. "Every eye shall see Him." Rev. 1:7.

The Glory of the Second Advent

He comes "with great power and glory." Mark 13:26. He comes "with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God." 1 Thess. 4:16. He comes attended by "all the holy angels." Matt. 25:31. There are "ten thousand times ten thousand" (Dan. 7:10) of these holy beings. Their "countenance" is "like lightning" and their "raiment white as snow." Matt. 28:3. He comes as "King of kings," and in the glory of the Father. The whole heavens will be ablaze with the light, majesty, and glory reflected by the untold millions of these heavenly beings. No mortal man can ever portray by pen or voice, or conceive with the mind, the awfulness and splendor of this all-important and soon-coming event; but every soul living upon the earth at that time must witness the glory and majesty of His coming.

Joel, in speaking of the time when "the day of the Lord . . . is nigh at hand," said the world would "prepare war" and "wake up the mighty men," "the heathen" would "be awakened." Joel 2:1; 3:9, 12. John expresses it, "The kings of the earth and of the whole world" would be gathered together, Rev. 16:14.

These scriptures and others present an exact picture of what we shall soon see in all the world. Through greed of gain, lawlessness, increasing violence, trouble between capital and labor, national and international complications, and mighty preparations for war, the world will grow more and more perplexed. "Men's hearts" are "failing them for fear" as they see "those things which are coming on the earth." Luke 21:26. Surely that day is imminent, and is the crowning event of all the ages.

A Day of Wrath to the Wicked

Then "the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of His wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?" Rev. 6:15-17.

They recognize that they are not able to stand. O, then the unprepared, the ungodly, the unholy, the unclean, the unthankful, the unbeliever, the impure, the disobedient, sinners everywhere and of every sort, even the "sinners in Zion," will be afraid and cannot stand. The blazing, glorious light will so shine that all those who have been living in wickedness, sensualism, crime, and sin, will be struck down "with the brightness of His coming." 2 Thess. 2:8.

The last and mighty struggle is on.

"The Lord hath a controversy with the nations, He will plead with all flesh; He will give them that are wicked to the sword." "The slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth." Jer. 25:31, 33.

For six thousand years the controversy has been going on, the prince of the power of the air and his hosts on one side marshaling the armies of earth, and the armies of the Prince of Peace on the other side contending for the truth. The prophet long ago had such a clear view of this Titanic struggle when Jesus came and the terrible destruction that would follow, that he cried out:

"I am pained at my very heart; my heart maketh a noise in me; I cannot hold my peace. . . . Destruction upon destruction is cried; for the whole land is spoiled." Jer. 4:19, 20.

He saw the earth "without form, and void," "the mountains . . . trembled, and all the hills moved lightly." "There was no man." "All the cities thereof were broken down." The next utterance marks the time when all this occurs: "At the presence of the Lord, and by His fierce anger." Jer. 4:23-26.

My friend, it is not "the yellow peril" that men need to fear so much today, nor the "black peril," nor "the rising tide of color," but the peril of the mighty wrath of the great God as He comes "in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." 2 Thess. 1:8.

The Grand and Glorious Consummation

O, thank the Lord, the world's Redeemer and King will then take this old sin-cursed, storm-tossed, blood-drenched, ruined world into His control, for its full and complete reconstruction. No more will the history of earth's inhabitants be marred with strife, bloodshed, sorrow, and death, for every trace of sin and misery will be banished forever.

There is to be a glorious new order of things. Surely it is to come. God has promised it. There is a supreme, longing desire in many a human soul for it. But when the highest civilization of the world develops into a mighty world-wide war, and breaks in pieces all that has been built up, then it must be blind confidence indeed which looks to this very civilization to bring about a new order of things that could be of any permanent value. If the present civilization, society, and governments cannot produce the desired condition, when in the fulness of their strength, and having had everything their own way these many years, how can they be expected to do so when their strength and glory have been annihilated in the mighty struggle?

There will be a new order of things, but certainly it cannot arise from or upon the ruins of the old, nor from this present world anywhere. Only by the setting up of the kingdom of God at the glorious coming of the Lord, can this blessed new order of things be accomplished, and thus, it is written, "shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." It is when the nations are angry that "the kingdoms of this world" are to "become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11:18, 15. "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High," and "the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom." Dan. 7:27, 18.

There is therefore no question but that this grand and all-absorbing, all-crowning event is very, very near at hand. It is therefore of first importance to all people everywhere, to prepare for what will happen when Jesus our blessed Lord shall come.

"Joy to the world, the Lord will come!
Let earth receive her King!
Let every heart prepare Him room,
And heaven and nature sing."

The Man in the Well Wanted the Book

COLPORTEUR ALFRED FOSSEY, of the Canadian Northwest, had been canvassing a group of men working away at sinking a well. He had taken an order or two roundabout the top of the well, and was leaving. Just then a man came up from the well, climbing hand over hand up the rope.

"Hold him, hold him!" he cried, "I want one of those books." Somehow the message of the books had reached him down in the well, and he didn't propose to be passed by.

Does it not suggest again how the Lord is impressing men and women all about us to give attention to this advent message? More and more urgently are workers needed to carry the books to those who are being prepared to purchase and read them.

W. A. S.

Our Willing Help

JOHN BUNYAN CAREY

WHEN our hearts are bowed with sorrow,
And our eyes are filled with tears;
When gross darkness gathers round us,
When our soul is filled with fears,

Let us lift our eyes to heaven,
From this cold earth turn away;
If we get a glimpse of Jesus,
Life's dark night will turn to day.

In the Rock, the Rock of Ages,
We will find a sure release
From our cares and from our trials,
And in Him we'll find sweet peace.

Yes, there's One who's watching o'er us,
And He knows our every care;
If we've fully learned to trust Him,
All our sorrows He will share.

He knows when our load's too heavy;
He knows when our path is steep;
He knows where the shoals are hiding,
So He leads and guides our feet.

So when darkness gathers round us,
And no help is present there,
We shall find a help in Jesus
If we kneel in secret prayer.

A SYNOPSIS OF PRESENT TRUTH

"I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth."

Cumulative Signs of Christ's Coming

THE advent believer is not left without a sure and abiding hope in the coming of the Lord. His faith finds its foundation and assurance, not in speculation or philosophical reasoning, but in the Scriptures of Truth. It was this which afforded a foundation for the faith of the apostle Peter. He declares:

"We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of His majesty."

Many who read these words have for long years looked for the coming of the Lord. How the evidences have multiplied! What cumulative proof we have that we are living in the closing days of earth's history! There is no uncertainty nor dissonance in the clear words of testimony which we find in the response of current history to recorded prophecy.

The evidences of the coming of the Lord naturally range themselves under two heads. First, we have what might be designated as —

Time Prophecies of the Lord's Return

Among these we may mention ten which stand out in bold and striking outline:

1. The Prophecy of World Empire. Daniel 2.—The great world kingdoms — Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome — were represented by the gold, silver, brass, and iron of the image described in this chapter. We are now living in the divided state of the Roman Empire, represented by the mixture of iron and clay in the feet and toes of the image. The next great event is the establishment of Christ's kingdom, represented by the stone cut out without hands, which became a great mountain and filled the whole earth.

2. The Prophecy of Antichrist. Daniel 7.—In this chapter the four world kingdoms are represented by the lion, the bear, the leopard, and the great and terrible beast. In the breaking up of the Roman monarchy there developed the papal power, represented by the little horn of this chapter. He was to carry on his desolating work against the saints of God and against the truth of God unto "a time and times and the dividing of time," or 1260 years. This period began in 538 A. D. and ended in 1798. Even after the expiration of this period the papacy was seen to utter great swelling words, doubtless fulfilled in the declaration of papal infallibility in 1870, and in other utterances. We are living between the events predicted in verses 26 and 27. The next event in this prophecy is the establishment of Christ's everlasting kingdom.

3. The Sanctuary and the 2300 Days. Daniel 8 and 9.—In these chapters a long prophetic period is brought to view, beginning with the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, in the autumn of 457 B. C., and ending in the autumn of 1844 A. D. The latter date marked the beginning of Christ's ministry in the second apartment of the heavenly sanctuary. This ministry is now going on. It comprises a work of judgment, an examination of the heavenly records whereby the fate of mankind is determined for weal or woe. It is the work predicted in the prophecy, "Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Dan. 8:14. How long this work in the heavenly court will continue, how soon it will reach the cases of the living, we have no means of knowing. We must believe, however, that soon every case will be determined, and the decisions of the court will be carried into effect at the coming of the Lord.

4. Forecast of the World's History.—In the eleventh and twelfth chapters of Daniel we have a great prophetic forecast of the world's history, extending from the days of Daniel to the close of time. The last human link in this long chain brings to view the work of "the king of the north" as represented in the history of the Ottoman Empire. Soon, the prophecy indicates, this power, establishing his seat of government at Jerusalem, will come to his end. Dan. 11:45. This will immediately precede the standing up of Michael, the time of trouble, and the deliverance of the people of God, as indicated in Daniel 12:1, 2.

5. The Seven Churches of Revelation 1 to 3.—Here we have represented the internal history of the church between the first and second advents of Christ. The last, or Laodicean, period of the church, has already been reached. This period has to do with the work of judgment in heaven above, and with the proclamation of the judgment message in the earth. That judgment work and judgment message are now in progress, and will reach their culmination in the coming of the Master.

6. The Seven Seals. Revelation 5 and 6.—This prophecy likewise embraces the time between the first and second advents. It shows the relationship existing between the church and the world. The period brought to view under the sixth seal has already been reached, as indicated by the great Lisbon earthquake of 1755; the darkening of the sun, May 19, 1780; the falling of the stars, Nov. 13, 1833 — prominent events which take place under this seal. We are now living between the events predicted. Rev. 6:13, 14.

According to this prophecy, the next great event to be witnessed is the departing of the heavens "as a scroll when it is rolled together," at the coming of the Lord to reap the harvest of the earth. The seventh, or final, seal takes us over into the eternal state.

7. The Seven Trumpets. Revelation 8 and 9.—In this prophecy is afforded a picture of certain desolating powers evidently used of God for the punishment of evil-doers. The last one brought to view, the Ottoman power, is associated with a definite time prediction. The power was to be loosed for its devastating work for "an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men," a period of time ending in 1840, and resulting in the curbing of that desolating domination which had been exercised for so many years. Under this sixth trumpet there was to go to the world the message contained in chapter 10, the judgment-hour message given in 1844. Under the sounding of the seventh trumpet, a little way in the future, it is declared, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever."

8. The Two Witnesses. Revelation 11.—The terrible war waged against the Word of God on the part of infidel France, is clearly portrayed in this chapter. This prophecy chronologically falls under the sounding of the sixth trumpet, which we have just considered, and is followed by the sounding of the seventh trumpet, marking the establishment of the kingdom of God.

9. The Work of the Dragon. Revelation 12.—This prophecy represents the efforts of Satan, exerted through earthly powers, to destroy the church of Christ; first, under pagan Rome, to destroy Christ, the Seed of the woman; second, under papal Rome, to annihilate the church during the "thousand two hundred and threescore days," reaching from 538 to 1798 A. D.; third, to destroy the remnant church, because they keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus Christ. This prophecy brings us down to the last generation, to the remnant church, which, standing firmly for the truth of God, is awaiting its triumph at the coming of the Lord.

10. The Two-horned Beast of Revelation 13 and 14.—This prophecy in reality forms the climax of all the other prophetic periods. It brings to view the work of the false prophet, apostate Protestantism, in union with the papal power of Rome. It shows that in the United States there will arise a union of church and state, the creation of an image to the papal beast; that the special mark of papal authority will be enforced; and that persecution will result to all dissenters. But God does not leave the world in darkness as to His righteous requirements. This prophecy reveals that He sends to the children of men a message, even as He did in the days of Noah, warning them of the evils coming upon the earth, revealing His own holy requirements as contained in His law, the only means of salvation as contained in His everlasting gospel, the imminence of His judgment hour, and the need of that preparation of heart and life that will enable men to meet its exacting requirements. Blind indeed is the one who cannot see in the events taking place around us the exact fulfilment of these prophetic predictions. The great objective in this prophecy is the coming of the Lord seated upon a cloud, with a sickle in His hand, to reap the harvest of the earth.

Thus every one of these ten great prophetic periods points with unerring index finger, to the coming of the Lord. Surely, we have not followed cunningly devised fables.

In addition to these time prophecies, there is another class of prophecies we might designate as—

The Sign Prophecies

These afford strong contributory proof that we are living in the closing days of earth's history. These sign prophecies may be enumerated in the following order:

1. Signs in the Heavens. Matt. 24:29, 30; Luke 21:25-27.—The great persecutions here brought to view occurred during the days of papal supremacy, from 538 to 1798 A. D. Before those days ended, after the tribulation or persecution ceased, the sun was to be darkened. This was fulfilled in that most notable event, the dark day of May 19, 1780. The falling of the stars was fulfilled in the great meteoric shower of Nov. 13, 1833.

2. Conditions in the Physical World. Heb. 1:10-12; Luke 21:23-27.—That the earth is indeed waxing "old like a garment" (Isa. 51:6), is indicated by increasing earthquakes, famines, tidal waves, and upheavals. These are multiplying in number and growing in intensity from year to year. They are signs of coming dissolution.

3. Conditions in the Social World. Luke 17:26-30.—How strikingly the conditions of modern-day society fulfil this prediction by our Lord! The two great prevailing signs in the days of Sodom were intemperance and licentiousness. These conditions are typical of the days in which we live.

4. The Relentless Industrial Warfare. James 5:1-8.—Graphically and strikingly does the apostle picture the very conditions we see at the present day in the determined struggle going on between capital and labor.

5. The State of the Great Christian Church. 2 Tim. 3:1-5; Revelation 17.—Who does not recognize in the degenerate conditions of Christianity, in the spirit of indifference, worldliness, and skepticism which is permeating the modern popular churches, the fulfilment of these words of the apostle?

6. The Political Situation. Joel 3:9-16.

7. The Peace and Safety Cry. Isaiah 2; 1 Thess. 5:1-4.—In these two scriptures paradoxical conditions are brought to view. Isaiah indicates that a great peace movement would exist in the world, that many would be advocating the turning of the implements of war into implements of peace. How literally do we see this fulfilled at the present time. From every quarter the demand for peace is heard, but every effort will be futile to hold in check the warlike passions of men. Notwithstanding these efforts for peace, Joel declares that the nations of men will be preparing for war, and that the industries of peace shall be made to contribute to this fearful end. As the climax of this earth's history the prophet tells us that the nations will be gathered together finally to the great battle of Armageddon. Rev. 16:13-16.

8. The Desolating Work of Spiritualism. 1 Tim. 4:1-3; Rev. 16:13-16.—That there is a satanic power among the nations of men, urging them on to Armageddon, the last great battle, is seen in the work of modern Spiritualism.

9. Scoffers. 2 Peter 3:3, 4.—Notwithstanding the signs which exist on every hand that the coming of the Lord draweth near, there are found today thousands who steel their hearts against the accumulating evidences, and like the unbelievers in the days of Noah, they deride the impending destruction. Their awakening will be like the awakening of their prototypes in the antediluvian days. Unknowingly and unwittingly they themselves constitute a sign of the momentous event against which they inveigh.

10. The Spread of the Everlasting Gospel to the Nations of Men. Matt. 24:14; Rev. 7:1-14; 14:6-14.—To all nations, kindreds, tongues, and peoples, the message of Christ's salvation is being heralded today.

And not merely is there being given the message of His coming as the Saviour of mankind two thousand years ago, but of His coming in triumphal glory to bring to glad fruition His work on earth. The long-deferred hope of His people will at last be realized. They will look up and say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for Him, we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation." His waiting church will realize in that glad hour that their hope has not been misplaced. They have not followed cunningly devised fables.

The evidences of the speedy fulfilment of that hope are increasing in rapid ratio at the present time. There is not one sign, but many. Not one index finger, but many point with unerring accuracy to the one grand central event. As we review these evidences, may we realize that our hope is not vain. Soon "He that shall come will come, and will not tarry."

Let Us Keep Balanced And Use Good Common Sense

If there ever was a time in the history of the church when believers needed to keep balanced minds and to exercise good common sense, that time is now. Things are getting out of joint generally in this sinful old world. Men and women are thinking abnormally. Wild schemes are being proposed. There has come a wide departure from the conservative standards of the past, in the political world, in the religious world, in the social world.

Next to consecration to God we need to have good sense and sound judgment, even the sense and the judgment and the discretion born of the Spirit of God. We need this balance of judgment and the exercise of this good sense in the ordinary affairs of life. Of ourselves we are utterly incapable of exercising it. We know nothing as we ought to know it. If left to ourselves, we shall be carried away by caprice, by impulse, by sentiment, and upon the impulse of the moment shall do something which will lead to lifelong regret and sorrow of heart. And we need to preserve this balance and exercise this good judgment in the work of God, in the plans and methods we employ in connection with that work, in the selection of the material we use in the proclamation of the message.

We are led to these observations by several letters which have come to us recently from the field, asking our judgment about various propositions which have been made to some of our brethren. They have received from some one a proposal to circulate a certain tract which claims to have a wonderful message of truth for this day, and with the circulation of the tract they are to have an interest in some patent right or receive a profit from the sale of some farm tool. Our brethren inquire if they should engage in enterprises of this sort, if they should circulate literature of this character.

Now, we are glad always to help any one in distress, and we are glad to help any of our brethren to form a proper estimate in matters of this kind, but we are led to wonder many times, when such inquiries come to us, why our brethren and sisters do not use the good judgment God has given them in the practical affairs of life, and apply it to such problems. Why do they permit their judgment to be unbalanced?

This denomination has a wealth of literature, an excellent line of tracts and pamphlets and periodicals which have been prepared with special care and are particularly designed for missionary work. Why should we side-step this worthy line of denominational literature and circulate some independent sheet, even though it may be unobjectionable so far as its teaching is concerned? Why encourage and bolster up some independent publisher? Why encourage some brother in the idea of running wild in the circulation of literature, and pass by the superior line of denominational literature which we have?

We feel that the same principle needs to be studied in its relation to some of the wild teachings in the world at the present time. The Seventh-day Adventist who is acquainted with this message and with the truth for this day and generation, will not be thrown into doubt by some wild statement from one of our opponents; he will not be upset by some charge about the Sabbath, or some charge about the spirit of prophecy, or some charge against the leaders in the work. He will regard these reports as a part of the idle winds of doctrine which are blowing everywhere. He will give to those opposers the same answer that Nehemiah gave to his traducers, "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down: why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you?"

We might just as well make up our mind first as last that this gospel of the kingdom which we are proclaiming to the world will meet every sort of abuse, that every kind of slander will be hurled against its advocates, and we should settle once for all whether this message is the truth of God, whether we are going through with it, or whether we are to be switched about by every wind of doctrine and made the prey of Satan's snares.

Really, this is the question for every Seventh-day Adventist to consider: Will I be driftwood, carried hither and yon by the wind and tide; or will I be a tree in the garden of the Lord? Will I be chaff, blown about by the wind; or will I be the sound wheat which will remain in the sieve despite the sifting process? Will I be the dross, thrown out as useless; or the pure gold? Will I be a leaner, dependent always upon some human prop to hold me up, dependent upon sympathy to keep me going; or will I be a pillar in the house of God, upon which others can lean for support, to whom others can look for help? We must pass out of a superficial, variable experience into one of settled conviction, into one of definite purpose, if we are to stand amid the trials of the last days. We need to be strong men and women, and not babes.

There were some in the early church whose life was marked by this spirit of vacillation and indifference. To them the apostle Paul speaks:

"When for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil." Heb. 5:12-14.

May God enable us to have our senses exercised to discern both good and evil.

F. M. W.

* * *

"THERE is only one thing should concern us,—to find just the task that is ours, and then, having found it, to do it with all of our God-given powers."

EDITORIAL

"Watchman, what of the night? The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night: if ye will inquire, inquire ye: return, come." Isa. 21: 11, 12.

Is Jesus Coming Again? — No. 2

The Time of Christ's Coming

WE cannot tell the hour nor the day nor the year when Christ will come. The Master definitely warns us against setting a time for His return. "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but My Father only." Matt. 24: 36.

If this warning had been heeded, how many disappointments and heartaches would have been saved some of His misguided followers! But while we may not know the day nor the hour when Christ will come, we may know when He is near, "even at the doors." We are given certain signs or conditions by which we may know that the coming of Christ is near, even as when the trees put forth their leaves in the spring we know that summer is nigh. (See Matt. 24: 32, 33.) In our limited space we can refer only briefly to some of these signs.

Signs in the Heavens

We are told that the sun should be darkened, that the moon should not give her light, and that the stars should fall from heaven. Matt. 24: 29, 30. These signs met a remarkable fulfillment in the notable dark day of May 19, 1780, when the sun and the moon were supernaturally darkened; and in the great meteoric shower of Nov. 13, 1833, a wonderful celestial phenomenon covering no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface. These signs were a striking fulfillment, not only of the words of our Saviour, but of the prophecy found in Revelation 6: 12, 13. The earthquake predicted in this scripture was the great earthquake of Lisbon in 1755.

Signs in the Physical World

The Saviour declared that immediately preceding His coming there should be famines and pestilences and earthquakes in divers places. Matt. 24: 7. And the apostle Paul declared that the earth should wax old as doth a garment. Heb. 1: 11, 12. Surely in the earthquakes and famines and pestilences of the last few years we see a striking fulfillment of these prophetic predictions. Through these means God is seeking to arouse the world from its sin and indifference. The voice of the earthquake is the voice of God calling men to repentance.

Signs in the Social World

How strikingly the conditions we see to-day are described in the prophecy found in Luke 17: 26-30. These are days like unto the days of Noah and like unto the days of Lot; men are eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, buying and selling, with little thought of God. The pleasures of time and sense, the cares of the world, have crowded God out of man's consciousness.

Signs in the Industrial World

The great conflict between capital and labor which we see exemplified in the acute conditions existing in England, in the United States, and in many other countries, has been made a subject of prophetic statement. We are told in James 5: 1-8 that when we see this condition of affairs, we may take courage, knowing that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

Signs in the Political World

The great World War, the preparations which the nations of men are making at the present time for future conflict, are set forth in divine revelation as a sign of the end of all things. The nations are preparing for the last great struggle at Armageddon. The heathen are awakening. The implements of peace are being turned into implements of war. Indeed, war is becoming the world's greatest industry. Read the prophetic picture in Joel 3: 9-16.

Men's hearts will fail them for fear. The unrest and disquietude, the anxious thought and evil foreboding, which we see in the world at the present time, are set forth by the Master as signs that His coming is near. Read the statement in Luke 21: 25-27. We see upon the earth to-day "distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

Only in Christ may peace be found. He is the refuge for the oppressed, the comfort of the sorrowing, the hope of the discouraged. In His forgiveness may we find this peace and comfort.

As uncertainty takes possession of the minds of men, as unrest and war portend, how comforting for the disciple to know that in Christ he may find a refuge from the coming storm! In Him he may have peace even in the midst of the turmoil, a foretaste of the peace he is to enjoy throughout eternity.

Signs in the Religious World

Even the state of spiritual declension that exists at the present time is a sign that the day of the Lord is near at hand. When we consider the evil elements that are at work in the religious world, we might well be discouraged, were it not for the word of prophecy. Christ is being wounded in the house of His friends. Not alone in the pew, but in the pulpit, the Scriptures of divine revelation are being discredited. The inspiration of the Holy Record is denied. The divinity of Christ is discredited; His miracles are regarded as fables, His resurrection is regarded as a myth, the blood of the covenant as an unholy thing.

Evolution, with its heaven-defying doctrines and its denial of the literal creation as contained in the book of Genesis, is honey-combing the faith of the believers. These very conditions have been pointed out in the word of God as signs of the day of the Lord. Read 2 Timothy 3: 1-5 and Revelation 17.

Great Chains of Prophecy

In addition to these evidences which we see all around us that the coming of the Lord is near, we have great lines of prophecy which unmistakably and unerringly declare the same great truth. The prophecies contained in Daniel 2, Daniel 7, Daniel 8 and 9, Daniel 11 and 12, Revelation 1 to 3, Revelation 6, Revelation 8 and 9, Revelation 11 and 12, Revelation 13 and 14, Ezekiel 37 and 38, and other prophecies which might be enumerated, bring us down the stream of time step by step, and culminate in their fulfillment in our own day. These all point, as with a great finger, to one focal point, namely, the coming of the Lord, and declare that that coming is near at hand.

Preceded by a Warning Message

When heaven has visited the earth with judgments in the past, each judgment has been preceded by a warning message, giving a call to repentance. Such a message was given by Noah preceding the flood of waters. A similar message was given by Lot before the overthrow of the cities of the plain. Jonah was sent to give a message of warning to Nineveh. John the Baptist came as the messenger of Christ's first advent. In like manner Christ's second coming will be heralded to the world.

The Master declares that "this gospel of the kingdom [of the establishment and setting up of the kingdom] shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Matt. 24:14. Joel, the prophet, declares that a trumpet shall be blown in Zion, and an alarm shall be sounded in the holy mountain, and that all the inhabitants of the land shall tremble; "for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand." Joel 2:1.

This warning message is given in more minute detail in the fourteenth chapter of Revelation. It is a message which calls men away from the worship of self and of the world to the worship of Christ the Lord. It is a message which sounds a warning against the wicked principles and influences which are at work in the world. It is a message which proclaims that the hour of God's judgment is come. It is a message which exalts the law of God as the standard of that judgment, as the rule of life. It is a message which exalts the Lord Jesus Christ and His righteousness as the one power that can transform character and give entrance to the courts of glory. And this message, we believe with all our hearts, is going to the world to-day. By tongue and pen, by the power of the printing press, the telegraph and telephone, the radio, the living preacher, this message is being heralded in 252 different languages and dialects to the nations of men. And as soon as it has accomplished its work, Christ the Lord will come.

Are We Prepared to Meet Him?

Are we prepared to greet in peace the Master of life and glory? Can we look up in that day and say with glad acclaim in the words of the prophet, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for Him, we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation"? Isa. 25:9.

This will be indeed our blessed privilege if we avail ourselves to-day of the provisions of His grace. The door of mercy stands open. We are invited to enter that door. "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Rev. 22:17.

Will you not come to Jesus to-day? Will you not accept His love? Will you not yield your will to Him, and allow Him to come into your heart and transform your life? Will you not take Him as your example, and let the righteousness of His life be exemplified in you? If we learn to live with Him here, we shall love to live with Him through eternity.

If we will but take Him as our Friend to-day, He will be our Friend in the day of judgment. "To-day, if ye will hear His voice, harden not your heart."

F. M. W.

* * *

"Stormy Wind Fulfilling His Word"

DISASTERS of various kinds are becoming so common that we give them little thought as day by day we read of them in the newspapers. But these things ought not to be passed by without more than momentary notice; they are witnesses that we are living in the last days of the history of sin, and it is important that we realize that this is so.

In answer to the question of the disciples, "What shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Jesus said in part:

"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Luke 21:25, 26.

These words were brought most forcibly to the mind of the writer by reading in the Washington Herald of September 15 these paragraphs from a copyrighted column written by Mr. Arthur Brisbane, said to be the highest salaried editor in the world:

"Tens of thousands are homeless in Japan, their homes swept away by the typhoon and tidal wave, and thousands are dead. The disaster, as described by eyewitnesses, was literally awful.

"First came a heavy rumbling sound from the ocean, in the midst of a dreadful windstorm. Then a wall of water, ten feet high, rolled in from the sea, sweeping houses, cattle, and men before it, and washing fishing boats up into the rice fields.

"At almost the same time, a tidal wave twenty-five feet high, accompanied, perhaps caused, by a terrific gale, swept the west coast of Mexico."

The Great War of 1914-18 took a toll of the lives of nearly seven and a half millions of the flower of the young manhood of the world, besides devastating some of the fairest country, especially in France and Belgium.

Scarcely had the guns ceased to roar when there swept over the world the great influenza epidemic of 1918, taking an additional toll of not less than six million lives in the brief space of less than four months.

It matters not what is the immediate cause of the convulsions and freaks of nature, together with outbursts of human passion, that bring sudden destruction to thousands and even millions of human beings. There is One who not only created but who upholds "all things by the word of His power;" and when for any reason that power ceases to be exercised for even a few moments, destruction comes with stupefying swiftness and terrible results.

God does not "afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men," but He has a controversy with a sinful race. We should recognize as a call to repentance, the things that are coming upon the earth.

C. P. B.

* * *

"PRAYER is God's own strategic plan for our co-operation with Him in the fulfillment of His purposes; and yet how little time we spend in preparing to qualify ourselves to be able to rise to the awful emergency of the hour."

* * *

THE beginning of greatness is to be little; the increase of greatness is to become less; and the perfection of greatness is to be nothing.—D. L. Moody.

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By Calvin D. Bollman

The Sixth Seal

Chapter 6, Verses 12-17

LIKE each of the preceding seals, the sixth covers a period of years with their events, beginning with the great earthquake of Nov. 1, 1755. In describing the events under the first five seals, symbolism and allegory have been employed, but here the language is evidently strictly literal. The great earthquake was that of Lisbon, by which that city was destroyed, and much damage was done elsewhere. According to Sears' "Wonders of the World," pp. 50, 58, and 381, this great earthquake was felt over at least 40,000,000 square miles of the surface of the earth. Ninety thousand human beings out of a total population of 150,000 perished in Lisbon alone. From every standpoint this was the greatest earthquake of historic times.

The Sun Darkened

Twenty-five years later, namely, May 19, 1780, occurred the darkening of the sun, described thus in the "Life of Edward Lee," Tract No. 379, published by the American Tract Society:

"In the month of May, 1780, there was a very terrific dark day in New England, when 'all faces seemed to gather blackness,' and the people were filled with fear. There was great distress in the village where Edward Lee lived, 'men's hearts failing them for fear' that the judgment day was at hand, and the neighbors all flocked around the holy man," who "spent the gloomy hours in earnest prayer for the distressed multitude."

It is recorded of the Lisbon earthquake that "the people ran hither and thither, delirious with horror and astonishment, beating their faces and breasts, crying, 'Misericordia; the world's at an end!'" So, too, as told in the "Life of Edward Lee," on the occasion of the dark day, "men's hearts failed them" for fear that the time of judgment had come. The poet Whittier wrote of it thus:

"Men prayed, and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom blast of the trumpet shatter
The black sky, that the dreadful face of Christ
Might look from the rent clouds, not as He looked
A loving guest in Bethany, but stern
As Justice and inexorable law."

The Moon Became as Blood

The moon had full on the 18th, but the night of the 19th was one of the most extraordinary darkness.

The full moon which rose about nine o'clock gave no light until the latter part of the night, and when first seen, had, as reported by some, the appearance of blood.

The Falling Stars

The heavens, it seems, gave no further significant token of the coming of the day of God for about fifty-three years, when there occurred, Nov. 13, 1833, the most remarkable exhibition of shooting stars ever witnessed by human eyes.

More than eighteen hundred years before this phenomenon occurred, our Saviour had said: "The stars shall fall from heaven." Matt. 24:29. And John, about a half century later, telling of His wonderful vision, said, as recorded in the scripture under review: "The stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." Rev. 6:13.

Commenting long before the event, upon the words of our Lord quoted above, Dr. Thomas Burnet, fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, England, said:

"The last sign we shall take notice of is that of 'falling stars.' 'And the stars shall fall from heaven,' says our Saviour. Matt. 24:29. We are sure, from the nature of the thing, that this cannot be understood either of fixed stars or planets; for if either of these should tumble from the skies and reach the earth, they would break it all in pieces, or swallow it up, as the sea does a sinking ship; and at the same time would put all the inferior universe into confusion. It is necessary, therefore, by these stars, to understand either fiery meteors falling from the middle region of the air, or comets and blazing stars. No doubt there will be all sorts of fiery meteors at that time; and amongst others, those which are called falling stars; which, though they are not considerable singly, yet if they were multiplied in great numbers, falling, as the prophet says, . . . they would make an astonishing sight."—"Sacred Theory of the Earth," book 3, p. 66, 3d edition, 1697.

As with the great earthquake of 1755, and the dark day of 1780, the great star shower of 1833 was understood by thousands who witnessed it, as a sign of the coming of the day of God. A correspondent of the New York Star, in the issue of Nov. 25, 1833, said:

"We pronounce the raining fire which we saw on Wednesday morning last, an awful type, a sure forerunner, a merciful sign, of that great and dreadful day which the inhabitants of the earth will witness when the sixth seal shall be opened. . . . A more correct picture of a fig tree casting its leaves [unripe fruit] when blown by a mighty wind, it is not possible to behold."

Earth's Closing Scenes

Revelation 6:14-17 describes very briefly but most graphically the closing scenes of earth's history; let us read carefully, and ponder well these verses:

"And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of His wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?"

But not all will be thus overtaken by terror at the coming of that great day. There are even then some who know God, and these find a safe hiding place in Him. Instead of crying to the rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them, these exclaim:

"God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof." Ps. 46:1-3.

Again in Isaiah 25:9 we read these words descriptive of the experience of those who are found ready and waiting:

"It shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for Him, we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation."

O the joy of the saved, when Christ shall appear

To claim the whole world as His own!
'Tis the time of earth's harvest, the jubilee year,

When our Lord takes His children all home.

* * *

Longing

BY INA WHITE BOTSFORD

How oft have I felt in my heart
A longing to be at rest;
But the voice of the Master saith,
"It seemeth not yet for the best."

He knoweth the end from the first,
And He doeth all things well;
I'll trust, and I'll wait His bidding,
And my restless longings quell.

I know not the reason why
I must linger and suffer more;
I know not, nor would I ask,
What the future may have in store.

He may have a work for me yet,
Or my character need the test;
I know it is as it is,
And I'll leave to Him the rest.

* * *

"For I do know
God's love perceives
Not what we did,
But what we tried to do."

Vol. 106, No. 33

Takoma Park, Washington, D. C., August 15, 1929

One Year, $2.50

Printed and published every Thursday by the Review and Herald Publishing Association, at Takoma Park, Washington, D. C., U. S. A. Entered as second-class matter, August 14, 1903, at the post office at Washington, D. C., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in Section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized on June 22, 1918.

The Sealing Work --- No. 1

BY CARLYLE B. HAYNES

WE locate the present work of the people of God between the thirteenth and fourteenth verses of the sixth chapter of Revelation.

The signs of the Lord's return, the events which immediately precede that glorious occasion, up to, but not including, the actual day of His coming, constitute the subject matter of the sixth seal.

The time of the opening of the sixth seal is definitely marked by a great earthquake. Rev. 6:12. This we naturally look for during the eighteenth century, for the fifth seal has covered the time of the Protestant Reformation. It was in the middle of this century that one of the world's greatest and most destructive earthquakes occurred, the earthquake of Lisbon, on Nov. 1, 1755, and in this event we recognize the sign which marked the beginning of the sixth seal.

Twenty-five years after the Lisbon earthquake, on May 19, 1780, "the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the whole moon became as blood," thus fulfilling the second sign of the sixth seal. Rev. 6:12.

Fifty-three years later, on Nov. 13, 1833, the third sign covered in this seal met its fulfillment in a great meteoric shower.

The fourth event mentioned in the prophecy as taking place under the sixth seal is, "The heaven was removed as a scroll when it is rolled up; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places." Rev. 6:14.

This event has not yet taken place. It is still in the future. It will take place when Jehovah shall "utter His voice." Then it is that "the heavens and the earth shall shake." Joel 3:16.

Jeremiah was given a description of this coming day, and he wrote: "Jehovah will roar from on high. . . . He will give a shout . . . against all the inhabitants of the earth. A noise shall come even to the end of the earth; for Jehovah hath a controversy with the nations; He will enter into judgment with all flesh: as for the wicked, He will give them to the sword, saith Jehovah." Jer. 25:30, 31.

It is of this same time that Isaiah wrote:

"Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth. And it shall come to pass, that he who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for the windows on high are opened, and the foundations of the earth tremble. The earth is utterly broken, the earth is rent asunder, the earth is shaken violently. The earth shall stagger like a drunken man, and shall sway to and fro like a hammock; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it, and it shall fall, and not rise again. And it shall come to pass in that day, that Jehovah will punish the host of the high ones on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth." Isa. 24:17-21.

These passages describe the scenes of the last days of wicked men on this earth. The sixth seal in its closing deals with the confusion, the fear, the doom, the punishment, connected with the breaking up of the earth as it is about to give place to the new creation which God will make after He has entirely destroyed sin and sinners.

We Stand Between Great Events

This time has not yet come. This sixth seal, then, covers our present generation as well as all the time since the Lisbon earthquake. We are now standing between verses thirteen and fourteen of the sixth chapter of Revelation. The earthquake of Lisbon, the dark day, the falling of the stars, are all past. The removing of the heavens and the shaking of the earth are in the future. We stand between the two, between the last of the signs of Christ's coming given in this prophecy and His actual appearance. We are on the verge of world-shaking events.

What a sense of solemnity comes to us as we realize our position! Stretching back to the beginning of the Christian era, back to John on Patmos, every particular, every detail, every prediction, of this prophecy has been precisely fulfilled. Not one word has failed.

And now we stand at the end of the centuries of human history. There are no more to come. We stand awaiting the sound of Jehovah's voice as it shakes the earth to its foundations. This is in the future. It is in the near future. It is in the immediate future. There is nothing more of this prophecy to be fulfilled before the earth reels and rocks before the wrath of God.

But the church of Christ, which has been the subject of this prophecy of the seven seals from the beginning, what of it? The church will see in the events of this period the harbingers of her coming Lord. The church will be using these fulfilling prophecies as the basis of a great world-wide warning message of the end. The church will be about its business of witnessing to the truth. The church will be carrying forward to completion its divine program of salvation.

It is to the work and experience of the church during this time that the sealing message has reference.

Before the closing events of the sixth seal occur, and before the seventh seal is opened, there are other experiences which the revelator was shown were to take place during the time of the sixth seal. These are covered in the seventh chapter of Revelation.

Inasmuch as there is no reference to the opening of the seventh seal until the eighth chapter of Revelation is reached, it is plain that the events of the seventh chapter take place in connection with the other events of the sixth seal. These events are thus described:

Closing Events

"After this I saw four angels standing at the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that no wind should blow on the earth, or on the sea, or upon any tree. And I saw another angel ascend from the sunrising, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a great voice to the four angels to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we shall have sealed the servants of our God on their foreheads." Rev. 7:1-3.

Four angels are here represented as holding in restraint the destructive winds as they were about to sweep over the earth.

Winds, in Bible prophecy, are used to represent wars, commotions, tumults, and political upheavals. Jeremiah both used the symbol and explained it.

"Upon Elam will I bring the four winds from the four quarters of heaven, and will scatter them toward all those winds; and there shall be no nation whither the outcasts of Elam shall not come. And I will cause Elam to be dismayed before their enemies, and before them that seek their life; and I will bring evil upon them, even My fierce anger, saith Jehovah; and I will send the sword after them, till I have consumed them." Jer. 49:36, 37.

So again Jeremiah uses a destroying wind as a symbol of destructive war, when he writes:

"Thus saith Jehovah: Behold, I will raise up against Babylon, and against them that dwell in Leb-kamai, a destroying wind. And I will send unto Babylon strangers, that shall winnow her; and they shall empty her land: for in the day of trouble they shall be against her round about." Jer. 51:1, 2.

Supernatural Restraint

With this in mind, we can readily understand the prophecy so far as the meaning of the symbols is concerned. During the time of the sixth seal, before the seventh seal is opened, there would arise a state of affairs such as is here represented by rising tempests and storms, which, if they are not checked, will result in wide-spread desolation and ruin. This impending desolation is suspended, the ruin is delayed, the destroying tempests are held in control, the calamities are restrained, not by any natural causes, but by a restraining power above them, by the definite agency of God.

This restraint is exercised in order that a special work may be carried forward and completed before desolation and ruin sweep over the earth. This special work is obviously of such supreme importance that heaven itself interposes to hold in check the destructive agencies which otherwise would prevent such a work from being done.

More important than even the closing events of human history is this final work of God, so important, indeed, that He interposes His almighty power to suspend natural forces, He exerts His strength to hold in check the agencies of Satan, in order that this particular thing shall not be accomplished.

This work of supreme importance is described as sealing "the servants of God on their foreheads." A special angel, not one of the four holding the winds, is commissioned to accomplish this sealing work. He bears in his hands "the seal of the living God," which he is to place on the friends and servants of God, thus marking them so that they will be known to belong to God, and so that they will be safe during the impending calamities and afterward.

What this sealing work involves, and its significance to the people of God, we will discuss in later articles.

Prayer

BY GEORGE W. SHONE

"It came to pass, that, as He was praying in a certain place, when He ceased, one of His disciples said unto Him, Lord, teach us to pray." Luke 11:1.

What is prayer? "Prayer is the opening of the heart to God as to a friend." "Prayer is the key in the hand of faith to unlock heaven's storehouse, where are treasured the boundless resources of Omnipotence."—"Steps to Christ," pp. 97, 99.

True prayer, the prayer of faith, is a divine science that we all need to learn in order to pray effectively. This science formed a part of the education of the youth in the schools of the prophets established by Samuel. "Not only were the students taught the duty of prayer, but they were taught how to pray, how to approach their Creator, how to exercise faith in Him, and how to understand and obey the teachings of His Spirit."—"Education," p. 47.

If we desired an interview with an earthly ruler for the purpose of making a request for ourselves or in behalf of others, we would first seek information, in order to know how to address the one of whom we wished to make the request. We would seek to acquaint ourselves with court etiquette and language appropriate for such occasions. And if we had been the recipients of previous favors from this ruler, we would mention these, and express our appreciation and thankfulness for them, before presenting further requests. How much more, then, do we need to study to know how to approach the Supreme Ruler and Monarch of the universe!

The first essential in prayer is re- of God, we should ever remember that He is the Majesty of the universe, the High and Lofly One inhabiting eternity, whose name is Holy. And as we take His name upon our lips, let it be with holy awe. Angels veil their faces when they speak His name; and how much more should we, frail creatures of the dust, sinful by nature, utter that name with reverence. If we use it lightly, the Holy Spirit is grieved; God is displeased, and cannot grant our requests.

"I saw that God's holy name should be used with reverence and awe. The words 'God Almighty' are coupled together and used by some in prayer in a careless, thoughtless manner, which is displeasing to Him. . . . Those who realize the greatness and majesty of God, will take His name on their lips with holy awe. . . . I saw that these things will have to be understood and corrected before the church can prosper."—"Early Writings," p. 122.

After addressing God with reverence to His greatness and majesty, we do well to speak of His attributes,—His mercy, patience, and long-suffering toward us, His forgiveness and love,—thanking Him for the manifestation of all these in the past. Then we may present our requests for further favors. We come as suppliants before the throne of grace. We have no merit in ourselves as a reason why He should grant our petitions, or even take any notice of us. We are sinful, helpless, needy. Our only hope is in His mercy. So we present only the merits of Jesus, who died that we might be forgiven and be reconciled to His Father, and we claim God's promises in Christ.

*From the South American DivisionMarch

Mr. and Mrs. José Calido, of Argentina, to Bolivia.

May

Mr. and Mrs. Donato Sabino, of Argentina, to the Amazon district of Brazil.

September

Mr. and Mrs. Moises Rosales, of Chile, to Ecuador.

*From the Southern African DivisionJanuary

Miss Gwennie Tarr, from Helderberg College, to Southern Rhodesia.

February

Miss Sheila Davies, from Helderberg College, to Natal.

Miss Grace Burton, from Helderberg College, to Natal.

Mr. N. C. Stuart, from Helderberg College, to Southern Rhodesia.

March

Mr. Valentine Davies, from Helderberg College, to Urundi.

April

Mr. and Mrs. George Hiten, from Helderberg College, to the Congo.

Mr. Ivan Ansley, from Helderberg College, to Nyasaland.

October

Nurse L. D. Melvill, of Cape Province, to Nyasaland.

November

Mr. E. Marter, of Cape Province, to Southern Rhodesia.

*From the Southern European DivisionOctober

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. de Caenel and family, to Haiti (returning).

November

Miss A. Steib, of Southern Europe, to North Africa.

*From the North American DivisionJanuary

Prof. and Mrs. Lyle C. Wilcox and family, to China (returning).

Elder and Mrs. Albert Munson and family, to Malaysia (returning).

Elder and Mrs. E. P. Mansell and family, of West Virginia, to Portugal.

Elder and Mrs. N. F. Brewer and family, to China (returning).

Miss Dorothy Wheeler, recently of China, to the Philippines.

Elder and Mrs. O. A. Hall, to China (returning).

Miss Edith McPherson, of Ohio, to the Philippines.

Philip H. Shigley, of Ohio, to China.

February

Elder and Mrs. M. Popow and family, to Manchuria (returning).

Elder and Mrs. W. B. Riffel and family, to the Philippines (returning).

Elder L. V. Finster, recently of China, to Canal Zone.

March

Dr. and Mrs. George Rue, to Korea (returning).

Mrs. Theodora Wangerin, to Korea (returning).

Elder and Mrs. W. E. Murray and family, to South America (returning).

Elder and Mrs. Orley Ford and family, recently of South America, to Guatemala, Central America.

Elder and Mrs. C. L. Blandford, to China (returning).

Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Larson and family, to Inter-America (returning).

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Bartholomew, of Idaho, to China.

Miss Ruth A. Johnson, of Mississippi, to Angola, West Africa.

Miss Madge Keller, of California, to India.

Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Millam, to the Philippines (returning).

Elder and Mrs. H. M. Lee and family, to Korea (returning).

Elder M. C. Warren, to China (returning).

April

Miss Mary Brewer, of California, to India.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Torrey and son, to India (returning).

Mr. and Mrs. Fred A. Brower and daughter, to Colombia, South America (returning).

Elder and Mrs. J. S. James, to India (returning).

Mr. and Mrs. David Lust, of Michigan, to Cuba, West Indies.

Dr. and Mrs. A. N. Tonge and family, to Africa (returning).

May

Mr. David McFeters, of Washington, to China.

June

Miss Esther Pierce, of Michigan, to Canal Zone.

Elder and Mrs. J. D. Livingston and daughter, recently of Cuba, to Argentina, South America.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Peckham, of Oregon, to India.

Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Reiswig, of Oregon, to India.

Elder and Mrs. P. V. Thomas and son, to China (returning).

July

Elder and Mrs. B. W. Abney and family, of Missouri, to South Africa.

Elder and Mrs. F. E. Bresee, to Peru, South America (returning).

Mr. and Mrs. Julio Gerber, to Uruguay, South America (returning).

Mr. and Mrs. Chester Westphal, of Nevada, to Colombia, South America.

Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Angell, to Cuba (Brother Angell returning).

Mr. and Mrs. H. A. B. Robinson and family, to Mexico (returning).

August

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd W. Johnson, of Arizona, to China.

Elder and Mrs. E. H. James and family, to China (returning).

Prof. and Mrs. Cecil L. Woods and daughter, of Washington, D. C., to China.

Elder and Mrs. H. B. Parker and family, to China (returning).

Elder and Mrs. J. G. Gjording and family, to Singapore, Straits Settlements (returning).

Prof. and Mrs. S. L. Frost and daughter, to China (returning).

Elder and Mrs. A. A. Esteb and family, to China (returning).

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Atherly, of Oregon, to Martinique, French West Indies.

Elder and Mrs. F. A. Wyman and family, to Burma (returning).

Dr. and Mrs. Jacob Janzen, of Southern California, to Bechuanaland, Africa.

Dr. and Mrs. Frank Ingle, to South Africa (returning).

Miss Mae Matthews, of Kansas, to Abyssinia.

Elder and Mrs. M. J. Sorenson and family, to Abyssinia (returning).

Mrs. M. C. Warren and children, to China (returning).

September

Elder and Mrs. R. L. Odom and son, of Tennessee, to Spain.

Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Taylor, of Ohio, to Bolivia, South America.

Dr. and Mrs. Elton Morel, of California, to Belgian Congo, Africa.

Elder and Mrs. E. G. Annofsky and family, of California, to China.

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Kimble and daughter, of New York, to the Philippines.

Mr. and Mrs. Werner Wild, of Takoma Park, D. C., to Costa Rica, Central America.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Christian and family, of California, to China.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Astleford and family, of Alberta, Canada, to Curacao, West Indies.

October

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Morton, of Michigan, to Bolivia, South America.

Elder and Mrs. L. H. Olson and family, to Salvador, Central America (returning).

Elder and Mrs. R. S. Greaves, of British Columbia, Canada, to the island of Cyprus.

Elder and Mrs. J. A. Swenson, of Illinois, to Sweden.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilfrid Tarr and son, to South Africa (Brother Tarr returning).

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Ferguson and son, of Southern California, to Peru, South America.

Miss Ella Finster, recently of China, to Canal Zone.

November

Elder and Mrs. E. B. Hare and family, to Burma (returning).

Elder and Mrs. A. A. Carscallen and family, of Minnesota, to British Guiana, South America.

Mrs. W. D. Kieser, to Costa Rica, Central America (returning).

Elder and Mrs. S. W. Palmer and family, to Africa (returning).

Mr. and Mrs. James Cummins, of Michigan, to Peru, South America.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Shull, of Takoma Park, D. C., to China.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Crisler, to China (returning).

Elder and Mrs. J. O. Wilson and family, to Burma (returning).

Elder and Mrs. R. J. Sype, to the Bahama Islands (returning).

Mrs. Minnie Sype-Atteberry, to the Bahama Islands.

December

Elder and Mrs. D. S. Kime, to Sumatra, Netherlands East Indies (Brother Kime returning).

Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Barnes, to Argentina, South America (returning).

Prof. and Mrs. J. M. Howell and son, to South America (returning).

Let us pray that somehow God will enable His people, in this time of unparalleled opportunity, this year 1932, to send forth more laborers into the fields white already to harvest.

There Shines a Light---No 1The Time of the End

By ARTHUR W. SPALDING

"THE path of the righteous is as the dawning light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Prov. 4:18.

The closing of the eighteenth and the opening of the nineteenth century made the dawn of that great day which in its fullness shall allow no night, for the glory of God shall lighten it. Out of the Dark Ages of ignorance and oppression the divine hand had turned the globe of time with unhurrying and undelaying count. "At the time appointed the end shall be," was the promise of God, and to that end He ordained the majestic march of events.

Not by the little lives of men are to be measured the movements of Him in whose calm vision a thousand years are but as yesterday when it is past. The unfolding of the mystery of that divine love which envy challenged, must take its appointed time. The outworking of God's plan may seem to human eyes to lag or falter or even fail; but as certain as the stars in their courses is the fulfillment of the divine order. A century may elapse between the first and the following signs that mark the progress of the King, but "yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry."

Upon the azure-purple curtain of the skies God flung the first of His celestial signs: "In those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." The little world that saw it paused upon that dark day of May 19, 1780, and sent up a terrified prayer to heaven. But the terror passed, and men forgot; yet God did not forget. Between that day and the night, more than a half century later, when He overspread the heavens with the magnificent fulfillment of His next sign, "The stars of heaven shall fall," God was at work upon the unspectacular but most vital part of His plan, preparing the hearts of men and women who should be His heralds, and sending them forth to proclaim His message to the world.

For it is the way of God that He makes no great movement in the world until He has first made that movement in the individual heart. "The kingdom of God cometh not with outward show [margin], . . . for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." Christ will not fling the splendor of His visible advent upon the eyes of men until He has stood at the door of the hearts of men and knocked, and by some been bidden to enter and fill those humble, blessed chambers with His peace and glory. "At the time of the end" that Word which is the light of men was to shine into hearts with the dawning light that should turn their darkness into perfect day, and fulfill that promise that "they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

"What of the Night?"

"Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night?" The watchman saith, "The morning cometh." Who were the watchmen to catch the first gleams of the morning that heralded the coming of the King? Scattered in the far quarters of earth, unknown to one another, were a band of men upon whom God had laid His hand. Scarcely had the signal of the blotted sun thrown out its warning message, when there were born, in different parts of the world, a trio of men who were to be the most prominent heralds of the coming end of time. In America, William Miller; in Great Britain, Edward Irving; in Germany, Joseph Wolff, were born within a few years of one another, in the last years of the eighteenth century. And others there were following, perhaps of lesser note, but proved true disciples and messengers of the Christ.

Wolff, the son of a Jewish rabbi, snatched in his childhood from his prostrations and prayers before the repository of the law, to behold, through the eyes of the old surgeon Spiess, the vision of a crucified Jesus as the Messiah of God—the eleven-year-old Wolff cried out, "My mind is made up: I will be a Christian!" Turned out of home, disinherited, he wandered through Europe, from school to school, Protestant, Roman Catholic, at last to the College of Propaganda in Rome.

Wolff at Rome

The year 1816. Young Wolff, in Rome, was entering into travail of soul. He could not accept all the teachings of the Catholic Church; against the counsel and commands of his teachers and of high dignitaries, even of the pope, he turned from the study of dogma to the Holy Scriptures. With rash courage he openly combated the errors he perceived, and finally, after two years, was banished from the college and from Rome. His mind and heart were deeply moved: with sighs and tears and searching of the Scriptures, he sought for the Saviour that tradition had obscured. And he found the Christ as his personal Saviour, and with all his soul he devoted himself to the giving of that pure gospel to the world.

Edward Irving

The year 1816. Edward Irving, handsome, brilliant, talented, whom Carlyle was to call "the freest, broth-

Joseph Wolff (1795-1862), Missionary to the Jews and Mohammedans, in Persia, Bokhara, Kashmir, etc.

erliest, bravest human soul mine ever came in contact with," son of Scotch parents, devoted to the church, had finished his theological course and offered himself for service. But none opened to him a door to preach. He turned to teaching, yet still with his mind upon service as a minister to men. And in the quiet retreat of the Scottish hills, bent to the task and privilege of shaping child minds, the young Irving found the meaning and plumbed the depths of Jesus' word, "Whosoever shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven." The years of waiting were for Irving the years of ripening in Christian grace and understanding, and the product was a man who stood as a king among men, yet whose humility was that of a servant to all.

William Miller

The year 1816. Over in America an ex-officer, William Miller, but a short time out of the Army and turned back to the farm, enters upon a soul-searching experience. A thoughtful, studious man, yet also much given to social life, he had imbibed some of the free-thinking ideas so prevalent in that age; a believer in God, but not in the divine Christ nor in the Bible that testified of Him. Yet he held a high moral standard; and when one day he found himself suddenly overcome by his army vice of profanity, he was shocked into reflection and self-reproach. Shortly after, in the midst of festive preparations, he with his staff of helpers came under the influence of a powerful sermon that drove all thoughts of celebration from their minds. Deeper and deeper into his soul sank the consciousness of sin and helplessness and despair, until suddenly before his eyes there stood forth revealed the ineffable figure of a Saviour, the vicarious sacrifice for sin. Yet nowhere but in the Bible was such a Saviour revealed, and to the Bible William Miller turned with an earnestness that brought fulfillment of the promise, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." With a mind already stored with the great writings of the world, especially in the field of history, Miller now fed on the word of God. Forced by the arguments of his deistic friends to defend his new faith, he delved ever deeper into the Scriptures; and in the great prophetic reaches of that Book and in the perfect articulation of history with their predictions, he found at once his own strongest assurance and his friendly opponents' invincible answer.

Five years passed, and these men who through differing experiences had found peace and joy and strength in their personal lives, were still in widely varying work: Wolff, a messenger to his people, the Jews, in the Mediterranean lands; Irving, just beginning, in the little Scotch Caledonian chapel in London, the soul-stirring ministry that was to bring not only the poor, but for a time noblemen and statesmen and royalty itself to his feet; Miller, still upon his farm, pondering the message that was growing in his soul.

Four more years, and Irving, at the height of his popular career as preacher and writer, bent to listen to a lesser man who gave to him the key to human history; and with all his ardent soul Irving searched the prophecies and began to teach.

Irving and Wolff Meet

Eighteen hundred twenty-six and the Albury Conferences were called at the estates of Henry Drummond, hidden away in the Surrey hills. Irving and Wolff met there, with a score of other students of prophecy; and from these conferences, continued for five years, went forth with mighty power the message of a soon-coming Redeemer-King. Irving, through the length and breadth of the United Kingdom, with voice and pen, and followed soon by innumerable messengers, opened the campaign in trumpet tones. Wolff was back in the Orient with renewed power to proclaim Christ, Saviour and soon-coming King, to Christian, Moslem, Jew, and heathen alike, through the vast reaches of interior Asia, into Africa, and to the uttermost bounds of Europe, and finally to America.

Yet the Albury Conferences had scarce concluded, and the sound of the message from Europe had not penetrated the New World, when God by a stratagem thrust William Miller into the task that he thought too great for him, and sent him forth to rouse America to the imminent appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. In 1831, in a little log cabin on the western shores of Champlain, Miller first taught openly, to a spontaneous congregation, the interpretation of the prophecies that pointed to the coming of the King. And from that time forth, without the pause of a day, he was employed in the proclamation of the message of the first angel: "Fear God, and give glory to Him; for the hour of His judgment is come."

A century has passed since that day, a century of marvelous inventions and marvelous imaginings upon the part of man. And in their ephemeral lives men have gloated over the interval between the steps of God, proving the truth of that predictive word that "there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of His coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning."

And many there are, as in the days of Noah, whose faith has failed with the passage of the years, and who say in their hearts, "My Lord delayeth His coming." But "hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? there is no searching of His understanding. . . . They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength."

To the eye of faith the cumulative evidences of the coming of Christ are ever greater; and the human ear that catches the rhythm of heaven's march, the human foot that keeps stride with the stately steppings of the King, will not be ashamed nor turned back. The light of prophecy shines upon the pathway of the righteous more brightly than in the beginning, a century and a half ago. It is as the dawning light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

The Still Small Voice

But mark this, you who would follow in the train of the King! It is not in pride and vainglory of achievement, it is not in exultant measuring of the progress of a cause, it is not even in keen analysis of human history making nor in erudite interpretation of symbolic phrase, it is not in any outward show, that the kingdom of God comes. Behold! a great and a strong wind, that rends mountains and breaks in pieces the rocks—but the Lord is not in the wind. Behold! an earthquake, that shakes to dust the cities and terrorizes the hearts of men—but the Lord is not in the earthquake. Behold! a fire, that flames forth among the nations and devours its millions and its tens of millions—but the Lord is not in the fire.

And after the fire a still small voice.

The God that spoke to the hearts and souls of the pioneers in this His great work, stands today before each professing disciple and inquires, "What doest thou here?" Is it the tradition of the elders, the heritage of a faith, that brings you here? That is not sufficient. Is it the sense of security in the sanctuary of the ark of God, that brings you here? It is vain. Is it loyalty to a cause once espoused and not easily repudiated, that anchors your feet to this ground? It is not enough.

The chief essential is that you and I have a personal experience in the salvation of our souls, that we have sensed our sins and our helplessness, and out of the depths have cried to God our Saviour, and He has saved us. It is to know that our Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand upon the earth in the latter day. It is to have gone and to be going through an experience of stripping off of self, of unholy passion, of ungoverned appetites, of shortsighted ambitions, of the pride and vainglory of life, and to be filled with the power and joy of the Spirit that will conquer the world for Christ.

This was the experience of the men who began the great second advent movement; this is the spirit of them who shall finish it. This is to know the Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world, and that to as many as receive Him will He give power to become the sons of God, to share in the kingdom where there shall be no more night, and there is need neither of lamp nor of sun, for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever.

Lean Heavily on Jesus

BY I. F. COSMEY

Do the trials of life seem too heavy to bear?
Do the worries you carry seem more than your share?
Do not be discouraged, there's solace in prayer;
Lean heavily on Jesus.

When troubles come thickly and things go awry;
When nothing goes right, howe'er hard you may try;
Remember the Refuge to whom you may hie;
Lean heavily on Jesus.

When storm clouds are lowering and cover the sun,
When tempted by sins you've so hard tried to shun,
When vict'ry seems lost that you hoped to have won,
Lean heavily on Jesus.

Are you weary of sickness and ills that are rife,
Afflictions and poverty, struggles and strife?
Are you tired of bearing the burdens of life?
Lean heavily on Jesus.

Go, tell it to Jesus, your friend and the best.
"Come unto Me," He says, "and I'll give you rest."
Go pillow your head on His dear, loving breast;
Lean heavily on Jesus.

He'll quell all the storms that are raging and wild,
And like as a father that pities his child,
He bids you so tenderly, loving and mild,
Lean heavily on Jesus.

BIBLE QUESTIONS ANSWERED

ONLY SUCH QUESTIONS WILL BE DISCUSSED IN THIS DEPARTMENT AS ARE CONSIDERED OF GENERAL INTEREST AND VALUE

By CALVIN P. BOLLMAN

Revelation 13:13

Has the prophecy of Revelation 13:13 been fulfilled? If so, when?

Some have suggested that Franklin's bringing down of electricity from the clouds many years ago might have been a fulfillment of this prophecy. But with that suggestion we cannot agree. Franklin's experiment was a notable achievement for his day, but certainly not a great wonder performed for the purpose of deceiving any one.

To understand Revelation 13:13 it should be compared with Elijah's experience on Mt. Carmel, recorded in 1 Kings 18, which see. There, bringing down fire was a test of the true God. It would seem that Satan will yet counterfeit that miracle in his endeavor to secure the destruction of God's commandment-keeping people.

Evidently the bringing down of fire, as predicted in Revelation 13:13, is one of the "signs and lying wonders" spoken of in 2 Thessalonians 2:9, one of the "strong delusions" of verse 11, which God permits for the purpose of revealing to all the character and real choice of those who prefer their own ways to the path in which God would have them walk.

❖ ❖ ❖

Amos 8:9

Please explain Amos 8:9. Does it mean the close of probation where it says the sun is to go down at noon?

It is thought by some that Amos 8:9 is a prophecy of the dark day of May 19, 1780. The twin expressions, "cause the sun to go down at noon" and "darken the earth in a clear day," run true to the Hebrew custom of restating a proposition in other words, for emphasis in prose and also for rhetorical beauty in poetry.

❖ ❖ ❖

Revelation 20:4

How will the "beast" obtain control of those who refuse to worship the beast or his image, and to receive his mark in their hand or forehead?

We do not understand that this text should be limited to those who shall yet be called upon to suffer for refusing to worship the beast and his image, but that it includes also those who in past ages have been faithful to God, even to the death. When the image shall be in full flower, when, as expressed in Revelation 13:3, "all the world" shall wonder after the beast, there will be no safety anywhere on earth, for the enemies of the beast will then be regarded as the enemies of mankind, and the man who kills any of them or who delivers them up to the authorities, may think, as expressed in John 16:2, "that he doeth God service."

❖ ❖ ❖

The Law and Sin

Paul says that he "had not known sin, but by the law." Rom. 7:7. And John says that "sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John 3:4. God says that to keep His commandments and to fear Him is the whole duty of man. Eccl. 12:13. Will you please explain fully how the ten commandments cover all sin? For instance: "I am purposed that my mouth shall not transgress." Ps. 17:3. Which of the commandments cover that resolve in every respect? I should like to have each commandment explained. How does all sin come under the ten commandments?

We are told in Psalms 119:96 that God's "commandment is exceeding broad." In 1 John 3:4 we read that "whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law." This being true, that law which is "exceeding broad" embraces all moral obligation and forbids all that is morally wrong.

On one occasion our Lord was asked, "Which is the great commandment in the law?" And Jesus answered, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Matt. 22:36-40.

It necessarily follows that anything that is contrary to the will of God, anything that has in it any element of selfishness, that falls short of loving others as we love ourselves, is sin.

If there is any good that the law does not enjoin, any evil that it does not forbid, then it is not a perfect law; but Psalms 19:7 declares that "the law of the Lord is perfect."

Further light is thrown upon the great breadth of the law by Matthew 5:17-22 and 27-32. In the first of these scriptures it is shown that hatred is a violation of the sixth commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." In like manner, as magnified by Christ, verses 27-32 forbid not only the immoral act, but the impure thought as well.

❖ ❖ ❖

Rebaptism

Why should any one be rebaptized, since from the beginning it was not so?

Some are rebaptized because they feel that when they were previously baptized they had not been converted. Some realize that either consciously or unconsciously they wandered far from God, so that they lost practically all connection with Him; and to these it seems that they should make a new start, just as though they had never been baptized. In all such cases, rebaptism seems to be proper, and is usually the wish of the candidate. But when there has been open apostasy and conscious separation from God, baptism may properly be insisted upon as essential to church membership.

❖ ❖ ❖

Having Other Gods

Please explain what is meant by the words of the first commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me."

By this commandment "man is forbidden to give to any other person, object, or desire first place in his affections or his service." Whatever we cherish that tends to lessen our love for the Creator or to interfere with the service due Him, becomes to us another god. Thus appetite, passion, love of ease, self-esteem, anything that tends to separate us from Him who made us, may be to us an object of worship instead of the God who made heaven and earth.

(Concluded from page 20)

"As we do this work, we shall find that means will flow into our treasuries, and we shall have funds with which to carry on a still broader and more far-reaching work. Souls who have wealth will be brought into the truth, and will give of their means to advance the work of God. I have been instructed that there is much means in the cities that are unworked. God has interested people there. Go to them; teach them as Christ taught; give them the truth. They will accept it. And as surely as honest souls will be converted, their means will be consecrated to the Lord's service, and we shall see an increase of resources.

"O that we might see the needs of these cities as God sees them! At such a time as this every hand is to be employed. The Lord is coming; the end is near, yea, it hasteth greatly! In a little while we shall be unable to work with the freedom that we now enjoy. Terrible scenes are before us, and what we do we must do quickly."—Id., p. 101.

"The Lord cannot commend the people who, professing godliness, professing to believe in the soon coming of Christ, leave the cities unwarned of the judgments that are soon to fall on the land. Those who do this will be judged for their neglect. Christ gave His precious life to save the souls that are perishing in their sins. Shall we refuse to do the work assigned to us, refuse to co-operate with God and heavenly agencies?"—Id., p. 105.

Gains for 1932

"It was some of these things that led the Council three years ago to launch this movement for greater evangelism, and I believe we will all agree that they constitute a sufficient reason for this denomination to go forth into the unworked parts of the great world vineyard, and undertake a larger work for God than ever before.

"Three years have gone by, and naturally we are interested to know what the results have been. It is very gratifying, as we look back over the record of these three years, to learn that they have been the greatest three years in the history of this movement. That ought to give us courage, and we ought to thank God for what has been accomplished. The past year, 1932, was an all-time record year. We have never had, in the history of our work, so many souls won to the message. Yet I suppose we have never had more difficulties to overcome, more obstacles to surmount, than during the past year.

"Right here in North America, where for so many years no very great increase in membership had been witnessed, God has given a great increase during the last three years. There was a net increase of over 7,000 in 1931 and over 8,000 in 1932. There were baptized in this country last year almost 13,000 converts—enough to make up a strong union conference. When all the losses had been taken into account, there was a net gain in membership of between 8,000 and 9,000.

"We have come up to a new year, and those of you who were present at our meeting last year will recall that it was decided to undertake during 1933 to reach an increased membership goal of 12,000 for the North American field. That meant an increase for all our conferences of approximately 10 per cent. It was not a goal for baptisms, but for a net increase in membership. That would mean one third more net gain than we had in 1932.

"We have been checking up at the end of each quarter during the year. Reports for only two quarters have come in so far. We do not have the third quarter's report yet. But we were very much encouraged at the end of the second quarter, to discover that we had almost reached 50 per cent of our yearly goal at the end of the first six months. The full amount of our half yearly goal would have been 6,000 net increase. We had 5,408. While that was a bit short, I am sure we want to thank God and take courage. I suppose that must represent about 7,000 or 8,000 baptisms during that period of time."

Star Shower as Seen at Madeira

By E. P. MANSELL

It was about seven o'clock on the night of October 9, and we were seated at the table. I sent our youngest boy to the window to see if there was danger of rain, since I was to go out shortly to a Bible study. The sky was quite clear, and he exclaimed, "The stars are falling," at which the older boy went to see. Then we were all aroused to go and see one of the most wonderful sights we have ever seen. The heavens seemed to be ablaze with the star shower, fully 200 falling within a minute, at one time, and the phenomenon continued until 9:30.

About a mile from our home there live two Adventist families who had gathered to sing hymns and praise God after learning what was happening. What a contrast to the agitated spirit of the neighbors, who came running to our brother's house to inquire the meaning. Some of these had been real enemies of the Adventists and had worked much against us, but now they dropped on their knees and begged pardon, and decided to live a better life, as our brethren explained how the greater star shower of 1833 was a sign of the soon coming of the Lord. Three of these families now attend our Sabbath school and have begun to keep the Sabbath.

We announced in the newspapers that there would be a special meeting the next night, explaining in the light of Bible prophecy, phenomena seen in the heavens through the years, such as the notable dark day of 1780 and the great meteoric shower of 1833, as signs of the coming of Christ. The hall was packed to the doors. We have kept up the sermons on the coming of Christ, and the interest is increasing. God has more than one way to arouse the people to know that the coming of the Lord is near at hand.

Success in Spite of Hard Times

By M. V. TUCKER

We have become so accustomed to thinking and talking in terms of "the crisis" and "hard times" that many times we fail to recognize that God uses these very means for the purpose of impressing upon His people the fact that He still lives and works with those who press forward, in spite of difficulties and great obstacles, with the last great message for the world.

The responsibility of evangelizing the world with the threefold message in this generation is a work of divine origin. God gave His Son to die for the world. He had a definite plan and purpose to accomplish in doing so. That plan and purpose have not changed. "The crisis" and "hard times" through which we are passing cannot change them. As long as God lives, His work will go forward with power, and the message will be given according to the hour indicated on the great clock of time that controls the universe.

The dangers confronting the church today are not "the crisis" and "hard times." Our greatest danger is allowing our own indifference to spiritual power so to control our actions and attitude toward the message that we will fail to maintain that vital connection with heaven which alone can give us success in our labors for the lost. God desires to use us; but if we live without a true conception of our own responsibility in giving the truth to others, eventually we will lose our seems to be struggling to maintain itself as if it were supremely important. It can no longer be said that the entire evolutionary process leads up to man."—Id., p. 173.

This leads to the following summarization of the present attitude toward evolution:

"By the second decade of the twentieth century, the younger teachers in universities and theological seminaries were men who had been trained largely in the use of scientific method. . . . Such persons were not at all alarmed at the thought that doctrine might change as a result of closer investigation. Teachers belonging to the older generation were concerned to keep virtually unimpaired the old-time beliefs, and employed scientific conclusions with such adaptations as would cause as little disturbance as possible. Recently, however, an increasing number of teachers have begun to speak as frankly concerning religious doctrines as concerning the theories of science. They have been ready to abandon theological theories incompatible with scientific conclusions."—Id., p. 174.

Take Evolution As a Whole

In other words, as he remarks a little further on: "It is coming to be seen that the evolutionary process must be taken as a whole."—Page 184. What this means in relation to Genesis he explains in straightforward language:

"The complete acceptance of the evolutionary conception means that the account of the origin of man given in the first chapters of the Bible is no longer taken as literal fact. It is regarded as folklore."—Id., p. 174.

The harmonizers of the Bible and evolution began by loosing the bands of literal interpretation to allow the days of creation week to expand into long periods, thus to encompass the geological periods of evolutionism. They have ended up by throwing away altogether any literal bounds to the Genesis record, with the result that the whole of creation week has been vaporized into a misty fog bank of folklore. When a man says that he does not believe in the literal interpretation of the Genesis record, he is simply expressing in softened language his complete repudiation of the Bible story of the beginnings of our world.

A Pantheistic God

As we learned in recent editorials, the best that religiously-minded scientists have been able to offer of a harmony between evolutionary science and religion has been by presenting for our worship a god resident in nature, a pantheistic god. We wish now to show that the best that scientifically-minded religionists can offer of a harmonizing nature is the same kind of god. One further quotation from Smith makes this fact clearly evident:

"The doctrines with which we are familiar undertake to base our religious faith on what has occurred in the past. Man's religious capacity is declared to be due to the manner in which the first man was created. Our knowledge of God is alleged to have been given in its most complete form in an ancient sacred literature. Our salvation is believed to have been made possible by a 'work' of Christ accomplished centuries ago. . . . To a large extent theologians are still struggling with the problem of adjusting the theory of evolution to a religious philosophy which stakes its case entirely on the absolute perfection of some past stage of history.

"The evolutionary conception, however, turns attention definitely toward the future. . . . If the attempt should be made to define God, not in terms of a 'first' cause of remote beginnings, but rather as a power residing in the evolutionary process luring things on to a better future, we might see a new theology which would draw largely on the findings of modern science."—Id., pp. 186, 187.

A False Contrast

We need not here turn aside to offer any extended refutation of the false contrast that would describe orthodox Christianity as something attached wholly to the dead past, while evolution's face is set to a glorious future. Suffice it to say that Bible Christianity links the perfect earth of long ago with the new earth of the future, and the first advent of a past day with the glorious second advent of a day soon to come. Evolution may look to the future, but it can offer us no assurance what that future will be, much less promise us that it will be glorious.

The point that we wish here to bring out is that Smith would "define God . . . as a power residing in the evolutionary process." This is pantheism or it is nothing.

The evolution theory leaves no room for Genesis, so the record is shorn of its historical reality and turned into a cloudy myth. This theory likewise leaves no room for a personal God, above and apart from created things, as that sacred term has always been understood; so He is shorn of His reality and turned into a pantheistic "power residing in the evolutionary process."

F. D. N.

Continual Growth in Christian Character and Service

The Church of Thyatira

THYATIRA covers the period from the setting up of the Papacy in 538 A. D. to the breaking of the papal power in 1798. This was a time of persecution for the church. It also included the period of the Protestant Reformation. Consequently this is the most comprehensive message in this line of prophecy.

The close of the period reached a few years past the first sign given of Christ's second coming,—the dark day of May 19, 1780. To the people of that time, the admonition was, "That which ye have already hold fast till I come." Rev. 2:25. And again, "I will give him the morning star." Verse 28. Our Lord here is represented as the "morning star," the herald of the coming day of God.

Message of Commendation

To the persecuted of the papal era, the Saviour gives the assurance that His eye, "as a flame of fire," is ever watching over them, and He acknowledges their devotion and service during those days of tribulation.

"I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first." Verse 19.

The experience of Thyatira stands out in contrast to that of Ephesus. The latter church lost her first love. Her devotion waned through the years. But not so with Thyatira. "The last" was said "to be more than the first." Through the years the people of God gained in charity, faith, patience (endurance), service, and works.

In this experience Thyatira sets a good example for us in this age. There need be no loss of love for God, no weakening of faith, no diminishing of the spirit of consecration, no yielding to sin. On the contrary, there should be growth through the years. Faith should wax stronger. Love for God should deepen. Our consecration should be more complete. There should be a series of victories over sin, bringing greater confidence in God's power to save from sin. As the Christian experience deepens and broadens, the word of God should grow richer in its wealth of truth, its promises should become more precious, the prophecies and doctrines should stand out more clearly. The Christian should be able to say with the tried apostle Paul, "I know whom I have believed." Such is the experience that awaits every one today who will lay hold upon it. Says the Spirit of prophecy:

"When we know God as it is our privilege to know Him, our life will be a life of continual obedience. Through an appreciation of the character of Christ, through communion with God, sin will become hateful to us. As Christ lived the law in humanity, so we may do if we will take hold of the Strong for strength."—"The Desire of Ages," p. 668.

"Thy Service and Works"

When we think of this period of the church, there comes to mind the missionary zeal of the Waldenses, the Lollards, the Bohemians, the Lutherans, the Huguenots, and others who kept aflame the light of truth during that era of great darkness. We remember the labors of the Waldenses, who sent out their teachers, disguised as salesmen, to scatter the blessed word of God. There arise before us the faith, the courage, the fortitude, the loyalty of the Reformers, who risked their lives for truth's sake. Would to God that we might see the same characteristics manifested throughout the church of God today. There are those who have stood the test, even as did the martyrs of the Dark Ages, in defense of truth. Let us thank God that this spirit still lives, and pray that He may give us all the same loyalty, devotion, and fortitude.

To these loyal, faithful martyrs and overcomers, the promise is given: "To him will I give power over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of My Father." Verses 26, 27.

The day is soon coming when earth's order will be reversed. The persecutor will be brought into judgment, while the persecuted will sit in judgment. The One who will break the nations as a potter's vessel, will share His throne and power and authority with the saints. Said the prophet of Patmos:

"I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." Rev. 20:4.

Not alone to the martyrs of the Middle Ages is given the promise of "power over the nations," but there will join them those of this age who refuse to receive the mark of the beast or to worship the image to be set up. What an incentive to be loyal even unto death!

Seduced by Jezebel

As Jezebel of old led the northern, or Israelitish, kingdom into idolatry by introducing the worship of Baal, so the Papacy, by corrupting the Christian religion with pagan beliefs and practices, led some of the otherwise loyal people of God into apostasy. It is said that priests were permitted to enter some of the churches and to teach. It was for this that the Lord laid a charge against Thyatira. There can be no mingling in fellowship of the faithful with the disloyal and false. This position is clearly set forth by the prophet Isaiah, at the time when Ahaz was about to turn to Assyria for help against Rezin and Pekah. He said:

"Say ye not, A confederacy, to all them to whom this people shall say, A confederacy; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid. Sanctify the Lord of hosts, Himself; and let Him be your fear, and let Him be your dread." Isa. 8:12, 13.

Again the prophet Isaiah pictures the last-day confederacy of the nations in a vast peace movement. All nations are flowing into this union. It is a union of the nominal Christian nations and the heathen. Concerning God's attitude toward these professed Christian people, the prophet says:

"Therefore Thou hast forsaken Thy people the house of Jacob, because they be replenished from the East, and are soothsayers like the Philistines, and they please themselves in the children of strangers." Isa. 2:6.

When the enemy of God's people cannot succeed in corrupting their faith, he often seeks to lead them into fellowship with unbelievers, knowing that this unholy union will destroy their defense, and they will easily be led away from their allegiance to God. As a safeguard against this evil, the apostle Paul gives the following admonition:

"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? . . . And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be My people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

Repentance Required

"I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not. Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds. And I will kill her children with death." Rev. 2:21-23.

Even to the church that was commended for its loyalty and service, there is sent the most fearful warning when she turned to fellowship with the disloyal and false. "I will cast her into a bed" of affliction, and "will kill her children with death." There can be no compromise on God's part here, nor can there be on the part of His people any commingling of good and evil. When we seek the things of this world, we turn our back on God, and there comes a separation from Him. In turning to the sinful things of the world, we incur the just wrath of God. His mercy and love are forfeited, and we become the children of wrath. Said the prophet Ezekiel:

"Therefore, thou son of man, say unto the children of thy people, The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression: as for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness; neither shall the righteous be able to live for his righteousness in the day that he sinneth." Eze. 33:12.

Persecution came to Thyatira as a blessing in disguise. The Waldenses were destroyed by the sword and famine, but they await the crown of life. Later the followers of Wycliffe were persecuted, but the Reformation moved forward in England. On the Continent of Europe the Bohemians, the Lutherans, the Huguenots, and others were opposed, oppressed, and slain, but the church moved forward to victory, perhaps not seen as such in this world, but in the world to come.

One of the most encouraging characteristics of the Christian religion is its ability to throw off error, and free itself from hindrances. Again and again the church of God has shaken herself loose from apostasy, and clothed herself with power and purity. But not so with the great religions of the world. Baal worship perished. Zoroastrianism dimly exists with a few Parsis of India. Roman and Grecian paganism perished. Hinduism has waned until it seems impossible to inject new life into that ancient religion. Buddhism was a reaction from ancient Hinduism, but has been corrupted beyond recognition by its earliest advocates. Confucianism has long ago seen its golden age. Shintoism was largely eclipsed by Buddhism, and the two are destined ultimately to fall. But Christianity lives. It marches on to victory.

When Judaism set itself up against the logical outgrowth of her types and ceremonies, and the fulfillment of her prophecies, she failed, and her adherents were scattered throughout the world. Then Christianity went forth conquering. True, the Christian religion went through a period of apostasy, but faithful churches maintained its purity. When that great masterpiece of Satan was set up and sought to stamp out opposition, the church of God rallied and threw off the errors of the Dark Ages, and held aloft the banner of truth. The standard of Christ has been raised in every country of the world, and the cause of Christian missions will ultimately triumph.

The time has come for the church to cast aside every error, no matter how hoary with age, and go forward in the purity and power of apostolic truth. If the church of today will cut loose from the world and stand wholly for God and His truth, clothed with Christ's righteousness, then will the church of Christ answer to the description of the wise man:

"Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners?" T. M. F.

The Use of Tobacco, Tea, and Coffee

(Continued from page 2)

tites that mean ruin to both soul and body. Many of the popular nostrums called patent medicines, and even some of the drugs dispensed by physicians, act a part in laying the foundation of the liquor habit, the opium habit, the morphine habit, that are so terrible a curse to society."—Id., pp. 89, 90.

Patent Medicine

"The endless variety of medicines in the market, the numerous advertisements of new drugs and mixtures, all of which, they say, result in wonderful cures, kill hundreds where they benefit one. Those who are sick are not patient. They will take the various medicines, some of which are very powerful, although they know nothing of the nature of the mixtures. All the medicines they take only make their recovery more hopeless. Yet they keep dosing, and continue to grow worse until they die. Some will have medicine at all events. Then let them take these hurtful mixtures, and the various deadly poisons, upon their own responsibility. God's servants should not administer medicines, which they know will leave behind injurious effects upon the system, even if they do relieve present suffering."—Mrs. E. G. White, in Review and Herald, Sept. 12, 1899.

Temperance in the Home

There has always rested upon the home a great responsibility. It is here that life habits are begun which form and mold character. What great care should parents exercise to see that nothing is placed before their children which will create an appetite or thirst for greater excesses. This responsibility is very definitely emphasized:

"Often intemperance begins in the home. By the use of rich, unhealthful food the digestive organs are weakened, and a desire is created for food that is still more stimulating. Thus the appetite is educated to crave continually something stronger. The demand for stimulants becomes more frequent and more difficult to resist. The system becomes more or less filled with poison, and the more debilitated it becomes, the greater is the desire for these things. One step in the wrong direction prepares the way for another. Many who would not be guilty of placing on their table wine or liquor of any kind, will load their table with food which creates such a thirst for strong drink that to resist the temptation is almost impossible. Wrong habits of eating and drinking destroy the health and prepare the way for drunkenness."—"Ministry of Healing," p. 334.

"Intemperance commences at our tables, in the use of unhealthful food. After a time, through continued indulgence, the digestive organs become weakened, and the food taken does not satisfy the appetite. Unhealthy conditions are established, and there is a craving for more stimulating food. Tea, coffee, and flesh meats produce an immediate effect. Under the influence of these poisons, the nervous system is excited, and in some cases, for the time being, the intellect seems to be invigorated and the imagination to be more vivid.

"Because these stimulants produce for the time being such agreeable results, many conclude that they really need them, and continue their use. But there is always a reaction. The nervous system, having been unduly excited, borrowed power for present use from its future resources of strength. All this temporary invigoration of the system is followed by depression.

"In proportion as these stimulants temporarily invigorate the system, will be the letting down of the power of the excited organs after the stimulus has lost its force. The appetite is educated to crave something stronger, which will have a tendency to keep up and increase the agreeable excitement, until indulgence becomes a habit, and there is a continual craving for stronger stimulus, as tobacco, wines, and liquors. The more the appetite is indulged, the more frequent will be its demands, and the more difficult of control. The more debilitated the system becomes, and the less able to do without unnatural stimulus, the more the passion for these things increases, until the will is overborne, and there seems to be no power to deny the unnatural craving for these indulgences."—"Counsels on Health," p. 124.

"Great efforts are made to put down intemperance; but there is much effort that is not directed to the right point. The advocates of temperance reform should be awake to the evils resulting from the use of unwholesome food, condiments, tea, and coffee. We bid all temperance workers Godspeed; but we invite them to look more deeply into the cause of the evil they war against, and to be sure that they are consistent in reform.

"It must be kept before the people that the right balance of the mental and moral powers depends in a great degree on the right condition of the physical system. All narcotics and unnatural stimulants that enfeeble and degrade the physical nature, tend to lower the tone of the intellect and morals. Intemperance lies at the foundation of the moral depravity of the world. By the indulgence of perverted appetite, man loses his power to resist temptation.

"Temperance reformers have a work to do in educating the people in these lines. Teach them that health, character, and even life, are endangered by the use of stimulants, which excite the exhausted energies to unnatural, spasmodic action.

"In relation to tea, coffee, tobacco, and alcoholic drinks, the only safe course is to touch not, taste not, handle not. The tendency of tea, coffee, and similar drinks is in the same direction as that of alcoholic liquor and tobacco, and in some cases the habit is as difficult to break as it is for the drunkard to give up intoxicants. Those who attempt to leave off these stimulants will for a time feel a loss, and will suffer without them. But by persistence they will overcome the craving, and cease to feel the lack. Nature may require a little time to recover from the abuse she has suffered; but give her a chance, and she will again rally, and perform her work nobly and well."—"Ministry of Healing," p. 335.

"The only safe course is to touch not, taste not, handle not, tea, coffee, wines, tobacco, opium, and alcoholic drinks. The necessity for the men of this generation to call to their aid the power of the will, strengthened by the grace of God, in order to withstand the temptations of Satan, and resist the least indulgence of perverted appetite, is twice as great as it was several generations ago. But the present generation have less power of self-control than had those who lived then. Those who have indulged the appetite for these stimulants have transmitted their depraved appetites and passions to their children, and greater moral power is required to resist intemperance in all its forms. The only perfectly safe course to pursue is to stand firmly on the side of temperance, and not venture in the path of danger."—"Counsels on Health," p. 125.

A CHILD of God should be a visible beatitude for joy and happiness, and a living doxology for gratitude and adoration.—Spurgeon.

"A CONCEALED disgrace is a moral cancer gnawing away the sinews of self-respect."

Vol. 112, No. 24

Takoma Park, Washington, D. C., U. S. A., June 13, 1935

One Year, $2.50

Published by the Seventh-day Adventists. Printed every Thursday by the Review and Herald Publishing Association, at Takoma Park, Washington, D. C., U. S. A. Entered as second-class matter, August 14, 1903, at the post office at Washington, D. C., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Representatives of a Pioneer Ancestry

As this closing advent message gathers up every ray of light from past gospel movements, it is interesting to note, also, how the movement gathers in representative descendants of various leaders of the earlier times.

In England, for instance, meeting the secretary-treasurer of the British Union, A. Carey, I inquired if the family name meant any relationship to William Carey, the pioneer of modern missions. Sure enough, I learned, our brother doing strong service in our work today is descended from a near relative of the famous pioneer.

In Australia, a few years ago, I met at a camp meeting a great-granddaughter of William Carey. I told her it was a joy to us to have also in our work in India a great-grandson of William Carey's first Brahman convert, baptized from among the high-caste Brahmans. Our Elder Lal Gopal Mookerjee's father and grandfather joined this advent movement in our early India days. And on his mother's side, I believe, Brother Mookerjee is a descendant of the first Hindu baptized by Carey, Krishna Pal, whose hymn we love to sing in English translation,

"O thou, my soul, forget no more
The Friend who all thy sorrows bore;
Let every idol be forgot,
But, O my soul, forget Him not."

—"Hymns and Tunes," No. 103.

Some time ago, F. L. Oliver reported in the REVIEW a visit with John J. Miller, of the State of Washington, William Miller's grandson. He is a member and worker in our cause at the age of eighty-five.

As a closing note in this incomplete review of representatives who bear names familiar in the story of the preparations for this closing advent movement, we may note that Mrs. Badaut, wife of P. Badaut, president of our South France Conference, is a descendant of one of the Huguenot believers who was a companion in bonds with Marie Durand and others who endured imprisonment for many years in the grim old Tower of Constance, in Southern France. On one of the stones in the tower may still be seen the words in old French that Marie Durand etched deep into the granite with her needles: "Resister—au ciel!" (Resist [or stand fast] unto heaven!)

As we have received the torch of truth from the consecrated hands of men and women who kept the faith in times long past, may the same love of God that filled their hearts make us true spiritual descendants of that ancestry of faith into which we all enter as we join the great world family of believers.

W. A. S.

Heralds of the Coming Morn

Seven Seals—Part III

THE symbolisms of the first five seals have dealt with the apostasy of the nominal church, her persecutions of adherents to primitive Christianity, the dawn of the Reformation, and the intermittent persecutions that followed; and now the prophecy turns from figurative language to most literal, but vivid, description of the signs of Christ's return to this earth.

These heralds of the day of God should lead the church to rejoice and make ready for the Coming One. The long night of sin, suffering, mourning, and death, is almost over. The day of God, with its eternal glory and joys, is soon to burst upon the gloom of a sin-cursed earth, chasing away the shadows, and ushering in a reign of peace, happiness, unending joys. For the tokens and assurances of such a realization, we turn to the study of the sixth seal.

The Great Lisbon Earthquake

"I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." Rev. 6:12, 13.

A great earthquake marked the opening of the sixth seal. The fifth seal had just closed, and with it the persecution of Reformation times practically ceased. Closely associated with this physical disturbance was the darkening of the sun. According to our Lord's prophecy, the darkening of the sun was to take place in the days of tribulation, after the persecution had ceased. (See Matt. 24:29; Mark 13:24.) Therefore we would expect the opening of the sixth seal within the 1260 years of papal persecution (ending 1798), but near its close. This is just when the great Lisbon earthquake took place—Nov. 1, 1755. There have been other earthquakes, but perhaps none of so wide extent. However, the time of this earthquake is the most significant evidence as to its identity in this particular line of prophecy. Concerning this great convulsion of the earth, we quote the following:

"Among the earth movements which in historic times have affected the kingdom of Portugal, that of November 1, 1755, takes first rank; as it does also, in some respects, among all recorded earthquakes. The first shocks of this earthquake came without other warning than a deep sound of rumbling thunder, which appeared to proceed from beneath the ground, and it was immediately followed by a quaking which threw down almost the entire city. In six minutes sixty thousand persons perished."—"Earthquakes," William Herbert Hobbs, pp. 142, 143.

"The Lisbon earthquake of November 1, 1755, appears to have put both the theologians and philosophers on the defensive. . . . At twenty minutes to ten that morning, Lisbon was firm and magnificent, on one of the most picturesque and commanding sites in the world,—a city of superb approach, placed precisely where every circumstance had concurred to say to the founders, Build here! In six minutes the city was in ruins. . . . Half the world felt the convulsion. . . . For many weeks, as we see in the letters and memoirs of that time, people in distant parts of Europe went to bed in alarm, relieved in the morning to find that they had escaped the fate of Lisbon one night more."—"Life of Voltaire," James Parton, (2 vol. ed.) Vol. II, pp. 208, 209.

The Dark Day

Closely following the Lisbon earthquake was the remarkable dark day of May 19, 1780. This event was predicted by our Lord, as well as by Old Testament prophets, as being connected with the great day of the Lord and the second coming of Christ. The dark day of North America was most marked in New England, where the memory of this remarkable event still lived in the minds of the people when students of prophecy saw this as one of the signs of Christ's coming. Like the star of Bethlehem, it was not manifested to the entire unbelieving world, but to the people whose hearts were open to the truths of the second advent.

Of late, attempts have been made to account for this phenomenon, but the people of that time knew of no natural causes. It was a mystery to them, only as it was seen later as a sign of our Lord's return. The farther critics are removed from miraculous happenings, it seems, the more they are confident of explaining the phenomena. But let us permit the contemporaries to describe the dark day. We shall first quote from a Harvard professor, as follows:

"The time of this extraordinary darkness was May 19, 1780. It came on between the hours of ten and eleven A. M., and continued until the middle of the next night, but with different appearance at different places. . . .

"The extent of this darkness was very remarkable. Our intelligence in this respect is not so particular as I could wish; but from the accounts that have been received, it seems to have extended all over the New England States. . . .

"With regard to its duration, it continued in this place at least fourteen hours. . . .

"The appearance and effects were such as tended to make the prospect extremely dull and gloomy. Candles were lighted up in the houses; the birds, having sung their evening songs disappeared, and became silent; the fowls retired to roost; the cocks were crowing all around, as at break of day; objects could not be distinguished but at a very little distance; and everything bore the appearance and gloom of night."—Samuel Williams, A. M., Hollis Professor of Mathematics and Philosophy in the University of Cambridge, Massachusetts, in "Memoirs of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences," Vol. I, pp. 234, 235.

We quote the following from another contemporary:

"That the smoke of burning forests cannot be the cause [of the darkness] may be rendered very certain. . . . Had the woods from the 40th degree of latitude in America to the 50th been all consumed in a day, the smoke would not have been sufficient to cloud the sun over the territory covered by the darkness on the 19th of May (1780). Any person can judge of this who has seen large tracts of forest fire. That thirty or forty miles of burning forest should cover five hundred miles with impenetrable darkness, is too absurd to deserve a serious refutation."—"A Brief History of Epidemic and Pestilential Diseases; With the Principal Phenomena of the Physical World, Which Precede and Accompany Them," Noah Webster, Vol. II, pp. 91-93.

And in Noah Webster's Dictionary (edition 1869), there is this explanatory note:

"The dark day, May 19, 1780—so called on account of a remarkable darkness on that day extending over all New England. . . . The true cause of this remarkable phenomenon is not known."

The Stars Fell Unto the Earth

"The stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." Rev. 6:13.

This prophetic picture was enacted in the heavens on the night of November 13, 1833. The Greek word here used for star is frequently used in classical Greek as meteor. The greatest meteoric shower of which there is any record took place in 1833. As the numberless meteors struck the earth's atmosphere on the night of November 13, they blazed into a display of celestial fireworks beyond adequate description.

Not only is mention made of this display in the Apocalypse, but in the Gospels and the Old Testament prophecies the falling stars are predicted as a sign of God's great day. But among these prophecies, John gives the most vivid description. We shall let others relate the details. Professor Olmsted gives the following description:

"The morning of November 13, 1833, was rendered memorable by an exhibition of the phenomenon called shooting stars, which was probably more extensive and magnificent than any similar one hitherto recorded. . . . Probably no celestial phenomenon has ever occurred in this country, since its first settlement, which was viewed with so much admiration and delight by one class of spectators, or with so much astonishment and fear by another class. For some time after the occurrence, the 'meteoric phenomenon' was the principal topic of conversation in every circle."—Denison Olmsted, Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in Yale College, in the American Journal of Science and Arts, Vol. XXV (1834), pp. 363, 364.

A correspondent in the New York Journal of Commerce, of November 14, 1833, wrote:

"The stars fell 'even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.' Here is the exactness of the prophet. The falling stars did not come as if from several trees shaken, but from one. . . . They fell, not as the ripe fruit falls, far from it; but they flew, they were cast, like the unripe fig, which at first refuses to leave the branch; and when it does break its hold, flies swiftly, straight off, descending; and in the multitude falling, some cross the track of others, as they are thrown with more or less force."

Another writer describes the shower thus:

"On the night of November 12-13, 1833, a tempest of falling stars broke over the earth. North America bore the brunt of its pelting. From the Gulf of Mexico to Halifax, until daylight with some difficulty put an end to the display, the sky was scored in every direction with shining tracks and illuminated with majestic fireballs."—"History of Astronomy in the Nineteenth Century," Agnes M. Clerke, p. 328.

Where Are We Today?

With the meteoric shower of 1833 in the past, we are awaiting the departing of the heavens as a scroll, when our Saviour makes a covenant with His people and bestows rewards at His coming. Our exact position is between these two great events of the sixth seal. We are in the time when a people are being made ready for our Lord's return. It is at this point that the sealing work of the seventh chapter is going forward. The seventh chapter is parenthetically thrown into this period; for, as the eighth opens, heaven is emptied, and silence prevails during the coming of Christ.

Our next study will be on the sealing movement of the seventh chapter.

T. M. F.

the courageous faith and readiness to live out all the principles of truth by some far convert from heathenism who must endure many dangers and hardships in following his new-found faith.

Engage in Soul-Saving Work

3. But there is something even more stimulating to our faith than the reading of the heartening reports from far mission fields. We can provide a demonstration in our own community that the power of God attends this message. There is no better antidote for that listlessness and waning interest that so quickly changes to complete loss of faith in the movement than to engage in soul-saving work for God. We may hear some one else say that there is a power that attends the preaching of the prophecies, and the other distinctive truths from God's holy word. But what each of us needs is the proof of that in experiences we ourselves have. There is no substitute for this. In spiritual matters, even more than in material, we learn best in the school of experience. No theory regarding the divine source of our message and its transforming effect upon men's lives can compare with the conviction that takes hold upon us as we witness a life transformed through the message we have been instrumental in presenting.

The church member who is busy in such work for the Lord, and who sees men turning from evil habits with rejoicing to walk in the ways of right, will have little time for the attacks of those who would instill doubts concerning God's leadership of this movement.

Study Fulfilling Prophecy

4. We should keep in close touch with world events in relation to fulfilling prophecy. It is not sufficient simply that we should read our daily newspaper or the weekly news magazines, as those of the world read them. Instead, we should scan the news of changing events and trends in our world always with a consciousness that the news we read may have a bearing upon our whole prophetic conception of these last days.

In order to have this prophetic outlook on the news of the day, we must find time to read something else besides the news. Too often in our busy life we seem to find little time for reading other than the newspaper. What we need to make sure of is that we are also constantly reading the prophetically interpreted news, such as is found in abundance in our denominational literature, both books and periodicals. We have found some Adventist homes—we like to think

Aids to Maintaining Faith in the Advent Movement

Part II, Dangers That Confront the Church

LAST week we considered the danger that confronts the church because of the temptation to lose faith in the movement. Emphasis was placed on the fact that our age is characterized by a lack of faith in all things spiritual, and that this dominant present-day attitude of skepticism is likely to infect our own hearts, if we are not constantly on our guard. Attention was called also to the temptation to lose faith in the message because time lingers, and to lose faith in the movement because of those in the church who are not living out the truth.

We wish now to offer briefly a few suggestions as to how we may re-enforce and constantly strengthen our faith in the advent movement:

Keep in Mind the Former Times

1. We should keep fresh in our minds the history of this movement. In reading the story of God's dealing with the children of Israel, we are repeatedly impressed with the fact that God desired them to remember all the way that He had led them. Their appalling outbursts of rebellion in the wilderness and their departures from God later on in Canaan, were generally the result of a loss of faith in God's leadership. This, in turn, was the result of forgetting what God had done in their behalf at former times. The Lord commanded the Israelites to erect various memorials, that when their children asked, "What mean these stones?" their parents might recount to them the experiences of the past.

The Bible presents to us the doctrine of faith as resting not simply on the immediate conviction of the individual soul, apart from all things else, but as depending in a very real way on the demonstrations that God has given in former times of His care for His children. The eleventh chapter of Hebrews, that notable chapter on faith, is followed immediately by the appeal to those who know of what God did for the worthies of old, and who are thus "compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses," to press on unfalteringly in the way.

We do well to refresh our minds regarding the signal evidences of God's guiding hand in the early years of this advent movement. Only recently we were reading again the life of William Miller, and the experiences of 1844. Our own soul was refreshed as we received a renewed conviction that God led in that mighty spiritual awakening. Then, as we follow on from 1844, and witness the forming of a compact and growing movement, protected in its tender years from extremes of fanaticism and directed along paths that have led to a world-wide field of endeavor, there comes over one the renewed conviction that God has been leading this movement from the beginning.

Keep Acquainted With Mission Advances

2. But it is not sufficient that we should simply keep bright in our minds God's leading hand in the early days of this advent movement. We need also to keep closely in touch with the very present evidences of God's guiding. We are not connected with something static, but with a movement, something that is enlarging and spreading its borders constantly. The miracles of grace, the evidences of a directing Providence, and the proofs of divine intervention that repeatedly present themselves in connection with our far-flung mission work, reveal that God is as surely leading this movement today as when it began. The one who has been tempted to lose faith because time lingers, will be led to a new and stronger faith, for he will see in the harvest of souls in benighted lands a new meaning to the words of Peter regarding the Lord's promise to return: "The Lord is not slack concerning His promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." 2 Peter 3:9.

The one who is tempted to give up everything because he sees about him others who are hypocritical and who do not live out the truth, will find in these reports of mission advance the best antidote for this temptation to desert. He will be impressed anew that the faithlessness of some member in his local church cannot minimize

Then the teacher reads the Bible to the family group gathered about the loom upon which the beautiful designs worn by the Bagobos are woven from the fibers of the abacá or hemp plant.

Killing Developed Into an Art

The Bagobos are a talented and competent people. They need light. Their talent has too often gone into wrong channels. Killing has been developed into an art, and a savage Bagobo will tell you the number of his murders as freely and as proudly as we would mention so many holes of golf. I asked many times during a back-country trip and always got a ready answer—"seven" or "ten" or whatever the number might be. And the killer would display his credentials. He who has taken three lives may wear the tangcolo, a red turban. Three more entitle him to put on the red-beaded coat; and three more, the red pantaloons. Ten or more deaths, and he may don garments of the same design, but in black instead of red. A man who has never killed is derided as a matalo, meaning one who would rather stay home with the women than fight.

We scrambled and slid down the tunnel-like trail through the jungle to Melilla. The sun was low. School was over. The children had all gone home. But the schoolhouse was still in use; for about a table the teachers sat working over their translation of St. Luke. And it was as if in that room I saw a great light—a light of love and of hope for the Bagobo people.—Bible Society Record.

three years, and had only words of appreciation for its timely messages.

Visit at the British Expedition for the Sun Eclipse

On June 1, we paid a visit to the British expedition which had come all the way from Cambridge, England, to this northern part of Hokkaido in order to observe the eclipse of the sun on June 19. There were five scholars from England, Australia, and Canada to assist Professor S——, the leader of the expedition. Professor S—— received us in a friendly manner, and started the conversation by asking what S.D.A. on my name card meant. When I replied: "Seventh-day Adventists," he at once told us that he had appreciated very much the company of one of our doctors on the boat on which he had come. I continued by saying: "That's just the point, Professor, to which I should like to call your attention. You will meet Seventh-day Adventists all around the world. Not only here in these sparsely populated northern regions of Hokkaido, but all over Japan, and on your way home, also in England, where in Warwickshire they operate a large school."

The professor listened with interest and told us that Warwickshire is the county where he was born. We then took out samples of our books. I handed to one of the scholars "Daniel and the Revelation" and to Professor S—— I started to explain "Patriarchs and Prophets." He continued to show interest, but when he found out that we believe in creation and a literal week, he declared: "I am brought up and used to thinking in different terms. There is little hope that you can convince us of your belief." Unfortunately, we did not have any of our scholarly literature on the subject of evolution with us.

I then asked Professor S—— about the Dark Day of 1780. He replied

With Our Literature in Hokkaido, Japan

BY A. C. KOCH

OUR faithful book evangelists, under the blessing of the Lord, are doing an important work in spreading the printed message to the millions of people on these northern islands of Japan. They deserve our prayers, and rightfully get the support of the ministry. Lately, on a trip to the northern part of Hokkaido, I was able to work, for some days side by side with one of our earnest book evangelists. Following are some of our experiences.

Opens the Bible and Buys Our Books

We came to a physician who, some months before, had bought "Patriarchs and Prophets" in Japanese. The book was lying on his table. He told us that with great delight he had read a good deal in it. We acquainted him with our other big books, "Daniel," "Revelation," "The Great Controversy." When we spoke about "Daniel," he went to his bookshelf, got the Bible and asked where he could find the book "Daniel" in his Bible. We showed it to him. In the course of the explanation of our book we pointed to the place where it is written that Isaac Newton, the great scientist, was a firm believer in the prophecies of the Bible and came to some clear conclusions about the developments in the future.

The doctor paid careful attention to what we said, and read with us Daniel 12:4. Then the conversation turned to the lax morals in the world and the downfall of the great religions. We turned the doctor's attention to 2 Timothy 3:1-5, which he was greatly surprised to read in the Bible. We went further and read with him Revelation 3:14-21. He seemed to be convinced that no human wisdom could hundreds of years ago have written such a true picture of our times. We spoke then about God's great message of warning and mercy, to be preached to all nations before the end comes, and read with him Revelation 14:6, 7. Everything we said seemed very logical to the doctor, and he signed gladly for the remaining four big books we have in the Japanese language—"Daniel," "Revelation," and two volumes of "The Great Controversy." He paid for them in advance.

We had a similar experience in another town. Our conversation turned into a short Bible study on the plan of salvation, and the lessons of the past for the present generation. The man was very much interested and gladly bought "Patriarchs and Prophets." He has read our Japanese magazine Signs for that he did not know about that, but certainly there would be ordinary, normal reasons for this phenomenon, and if we do not know them yet, in time, by the increase of knowledge and the progress of science, we will learn to know them also. Concerning the falling stars in 1833 he told us that such showers were expected every thirty-three years. He admitted, however, that he had become disappointed. In 1899 he stayed up all night, but no Leonids could be seen. "They are moving now closer to Jupiter than to our earth," he added. I did not argue with him, but handed him a copy of the English Signs, colored edition, and a copy of Life and Health, which he gladly accepted.

Workers and Canvassers of the Hokkaido Mission, With Visitors of the Union

At our request, the professor then kindly showed us some of his instruments and explained to us how they would take records on June 19. It was just a cloudy day. I pointed to the sky and said: "Well, Professor, we wish you a very bright day for your observations. At least with regard to the weather, are there not human limitations?" The professor smiled and said: "We hope for the best."

Among others whom we called on in that village and who gave us orders was a very simple man. He makes a living by farming and fishing. When he saw our book "Patriarchs and Prophets," he gladly subscribed for it. He told us that years ago he had accepted the Christian religion, and as a result of it had become very happy. Having no money at home, he went with us to the post office, where he drew a small amount from his savings account, and paid the colporteur for the book. Then he handed 1.50 yen to me and said: "One yen is for the Picture Roll you spoke about, and 50 sen is for the postage. I want to begin having children's meetings in my house." Having met the unbelief of scholars before and seeing how this simple man acted, I was reminded of Jesus' words, recorded in Matthew 11:25, "I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."

We pray that the scholars we met on this trip may again come in contact with God's people, and finally get a clear knowledge of "the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

A Colporteur Story From Yunnan

BY C. C. CRISLER

OUT of the Yunnan Mission has come many a story of devoted loyalty to principle, and of unwavering purpose, on the part of both lay members and employed workers.

An unusual incident marked the service of Colporteur T'ang, a Szechwanese who was working in the West Kweichow and Yunnan Mission. At one time he started out on a long trip through the western provinces from Chungking, accompanied by the eldest son of Evangelist Abraham Lo, a Nosu of Tating. While in Yunnanfu, young Brother Lo contracted typhus fever and died. Colporteur T'ang was thus left to continue his work alone. Soon after he had left the capital, he was met by bandits and robbed of his clothes and money. His old carrying basket and a few subscription books and canvasser's order and receipt blanks had been left him. He gathered up all that remained and put them into the basket that he had been carrying in a frame on his back, though he had no idea what use he could make of these, for he had now only his travel-stained garments, wholly unfit for wear in meeting the literate classes. He made his way into the nearest city, sought out a Christian mission, and interviewed the Chinese pastor; but aid was refused.

Colporteur T'ang had formerly been a maker of Chinese scales or steelyards, and in this hour of destitution he bethought himself of his former handicraft. He sought out a scale maker in the city. The artisan, though a heathen, was touched by his story, and, convinced that T'ang was an honest man, agreed to the colporteur's proposition that he enter this shop, and with borrowed tools and materials make up a supply of scales, which he would load onto his back and carry out to market places not ordinarily reached by the scale maker, in the hope of making sales.

Having spent considerable time in the shop, T'ang gathered up the scales he had made, went out to distant market towns, and disposed of all he had. Then, returning he settled with the friendly scale maker and began to make up another lot. This process he continued for some months, until he had sufficient earned above all costs and personal expenses to secure an outfit of suitable clothing. Equipped once more, he started out along the main highway running through northwestern Yunnan into Szechwan and on to Chungking.

Two days distant from Chaotung he neared the hsien city of Kiang-ti, which lies alongside a swift-flowing river at the bottom of a deep gorge, crossed near the town by an iron suspension bridge. The approach to this bridge can be seen from the village side for several li. At the time, Yunnan was being invaded by a Szechwanese army, encamped at Kiang-ti and northward. The boards ordinarily lying on the suspension bridge cables had been removed. As T'ang stood hesitant, not knowing what to do after making this discovery, soldiers on the opposite bank called to him demanding his identity. Then he was ordered to cross. This dangerously difficult order necessitated his picking his way on one of the cables below while with both hands he held on to one of the upper cables. Upon reaching the other side, he was accused of being a spy. His carrying basket was thrown to the ground, and the contents were scattered and examined. His hands were bound tightly behind him, and he was declared to be operating in the interests of the Yunnan army, and told that he must therefore be executed.

There was division of opinion among the soldiers as to how to proceed with the execution. Should he be shot or bayoneted? Finally it was agreed that the simplest procedure would be to push him over the cliff at the edge of which they were gathered, a hundred or more feet above the raging torrent below.

Meanwhile our brother's heart was lifted to God in prayer for deliverance. And in answer to that prayer the decision was changed. Some, believing in more orderly procedure, insisted that he should be taken to the commanding officer. He was bidden to gather up his belongings. But the colporteur protested that his hands were tied tightly behind him. How could he gather up his goods? The cords were accordingly cut, and T'ang proceeded to obey orders. Then he was taken some distance up the roadway to the temporary military headquarters.

Upon entering the presence of the commanding officer, Brother T'ang did not wait for his accusers to speak, but stepping forward, greeted this officer as he had greeted many others in his work as a canvasser. He explained what he was doing, and in due course produced the book he was selling and described its contents to his listener.

"Where can I get one of these books?" the commander asked.

The soldiers, dumfounded over
(Continued on page 21)

Vol. 114, No. 40

Takoma Park, Washington, D.C., October 7, 1937

One Year, $2.50

Published by the Seventh-day Adventists. Printed every Thursday by the Review and Herald Publishing Association, at Takoma Park, Washington, D.C., U.S.A. Entered as second-class matter, August 14, 1903, at the post office at Washington, D.C., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Yet a Little While, and Christ Will Come

Studies in the Book of Hebrews—No. 18

YET a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Heb. 10:37.

Already the writer of the Hebrews has affirmed the truth of the second coming of Christ, and now he declares that "He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." And as if looking down near the close of Christ's mediatorial work, he says, "Yet a little while, and He . . . will come."

No one who reads the signs of the times can doubt that we are living in the very time to which the apostle refers. The church of God has reached the last days of the last generation, and will soon witness the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven. Let us review some of the evidences.

Distress of Nations

Already the signs in the heavens have been given. The Dark Day of 1780 and the unparalleled meteoric shower of 1833, are in the past. Concerning these and certain signs on the earth, the Saviour said:

"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexities; . . . men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. . . . And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Luke 21:25-27.

Preceding Christ's coming in glory, there would be distress of nations, with perplexity, men's hearts failing them for fear. Who can doubt that we are living in this very time foretold? With the world armed for war in a way unparalleled in human history, and with crisis after crisis rising among the great nations, men are today living in constant fear of hostilities which may break out and sweep civilization into utter ruin. The master minds of earth's greatest statesmen are often put to their wit's end to prevent general war, while the public mind is keyed up to anything that might happen within a few hours.

And this apprehension of disaster is justified by sudden outbreaks here and there. How suddenly the Far East was recently thrown into the throes of a terrible conflict! This came on the heels of the devastating wars in Ethiopia and in Spain. These recent conflicts have taken on a fierceness, an abandonment of fear, and a frightful devastation scarcely seen in history. Truly they presage the coming of the fearful destruction which will sweep the world in connection with the great day of God.

As to preparedness for war, the September issue of Current History named a leading European nation that spent three times as much on armaments in 1936 as in 1913, the year before the World War. The world is an armed camp. The Washington Post, May 3, 1937, says: "A survey by American military authorities disclosed yesterday that at least 55,000,000 trained men can spring to arms overnight, in forty-eight nations."

Surely the present state of the world gives cause for alarm. But what does this situation mean to Seventh-day Adventists? If we will but pause and listen to the Saviour's voice, we shall hear it sounding down through the ages, "Lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

Capital and Labor

"Distress of nations, with perplexity," is not confined to military forces. Within our country, yes, our own neighborhood, there are forces locking arms in fearful combat. The past year has seen the bitterest conflict between capital and labor. Fierce rioting has broken out in various industrial centers, and clashes in other places were prevented only by severe measures.

And we hear of the greatest activity in organizing still other units for future strife. We would not here discuss the right or wrong of collective bargaining. That does not come within the domain of our discussion. But we would call attention to this great struggle, which augurs of future industrial turmoil, and which is a definite sign of our Lord's return. We read:

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth." James 5:1-4.

Vast fortunes, Inspiration has said, would be heaped together for the last days. At the same time the hire of the laborers is withheld. And for some reason, which this text does not tell, disaster comes upon the wealthy. The world has witnessed the rich slain and their property appropriated in post-World War times. What the future holds, we do not know in detail; but we do know that the struggle we see will end at the appearing of our Lord; and we are admonished:

"Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. . . . Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Verses 7, 8.

And Paul joins this remarkable prediction of the soon appearing of our Lord, by saying: "Yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." What a blessed thought, that soon our Lord will appear and bring an end to earth's strife, to its struggles for bread, its anxiety for the needs of a dependent family, the uncertainty of what the morrow holds, and the ravages of the grim reaper that sweeps all, sooner or later, into the prison house of death.

The Gospel to All Nations

We might call attention, as a sign of the times, to the rising tide of crime which threatens to engulf civilization; to the apostasy in Christendom, which leaves little more than a mere form of godliness; to the rapid increase of knowledge, as well as to other prophetic pictures of the last days; but we shall refer to but one more,—the spread of the gospel of the kingdom to earth's remotest bounds.

As we lift up our eyes and look on the fields of the world, our eyes are greeted with the marvelous panorama of sheaves being gathered for the heavenly garner. In the darkest portions of earth, thousands are annually gathered from the grossest heathenism into the fold of the Good Shepherd.

The advent message is finding its way into the most remote parts of the earth. We read of the message being carried up into Mongolia, to the provinces of old Tibet, and into southwest China; of its march among the lately discovered people of New Guinea; of its remarkable progress in the Philippines; of its spread among the islands of the South Indian Ocean; of the garnering in of thousands from the heathen of Africa; of its advance through Peru and among the tribes of the upper Amazon; of the remarkable spiritual awakening among the people of the Republic of Colombia, where it was so hard to get a foothold a few years ago; and of its march into other remote parts of the earth. Everywhere the note of victory is sounded as the third angel's message flies on to the ends of the earth.

Surely we are in the time when God is setting His hand to finish His work in the earth. The completion of the task is not dependent solely on the arm of man; for we read that God "will finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness: because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth." Rom. 9:28.

In this momentous hour, when the gospel is going to all the earth, when Jesus is completing His work in the heavenly sanctuary for a sinful race, the admonition of the apostle should come to us with especial force, "Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. . . . For yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Heb. 10:35, 37.

It is now no time to draw back from sacrifice, from fellowship with those of like precious faith, from loyalty to the truths for this time, from the toil in the heat of the day, from long hours of agonizing prayer, from the battle of the Christian life; for we are almost within sight of the prize, the reward to be bestowed at the coming of our Lord.

May it be said of us, "We are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul;" "for yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry."

We shall not prolong this series of studies in the book of Hebrews, but will write on the remaining exhortations and lessons as separate topics. Our topic next week will be "Heroes of Faith."

T. M. F.

Money Investments

(Continued from page 2)

profitable, and then they have blamed some of their friends or brethren whose judgment they have followed. I have known of some also, through the years, who, in a time of crisis in their business affairs, felt that some of our denominational organizations should come to their aid and lend them money to tide them over their hour of need. In this they have reasoned very wrongly. If our institutions or conference organizations should do this, they would prove recreant to their sacred trust in being the depositories of funds entrusted to them by their brethren and sisters for an entirely different purpose.

Illustrating the Principle

I well recall an incident which occurred more than thirty years ago in the experience of one of our institutions. One of our brethren in a neighboring town had been brought into great straits in his business affairs. He appealed to this institution for help. He desired a loan of three or four thousand dollars. He made excellent representations as to the value of his investment, and it seemed that a loan of this character would carry him safely over his crisis and bring to him, in the end, great profit. He promised the institution a large share of his gain. The institution, however, felt that it could not rightfully make this loan. This brought great grief to the brother in question. Shortly, he learned that another brother had several thousand dollars in the institution. He induced this brother to draw out this money and lend it to him for his use. This was done. Sad to say, however, this loan did not bridge the gulf after all. Both borrower and lender lost their entire investment. If the institution had made the loan, it would have been the loser in the same way, even though the security appeared gilt-edged at the time the institution was solicited.

Relation of General Conference

Our denominational organizations and institutions have very wisely kept aloof through the years from all transactions of this character. Repeatedly, they have been solicited for aid. Even the General Conference has been asked, at various times through the years, either to make loans or to give its moral support and influence to various personal business enterprises, the promoters of such enterprises feeling that with the moral influence of the probably say that that is not commanded in the book of God. Correct. And that what is not commanded is not obligatory. Also correct. By the same logic Sunday is ruled out. It is not commanded; it is therefore not obligatory. The fact that Christians early began to give a certain credence to Sunday means nothing more for us today than the rest of the record as to what Christians early began to do.

Finally, one word about the charge that we would make people "observe the seventh day of the week in a calendar established by a heathen emperor." Surely, it ought to be common knowledge in this day and age, and after years of discussion of revision of the calendar, that the week has nothing at all to do with the calendars established either by heathen em-perors or by Catholic popes or by any one. The week is a unique measure of time, and it bears no relationship to any other measure of time. It has come down through the centuries independent of all other time cycles. It is indeed so unusual that there is no general agreement as to the origin of the weekly cycle, except as we find the explanation in the book of Genesis.

We may still continue to preach the seventh-day Sabbath, based on the ten commandments. We have for our preaching a Thus saith the Lord, and we do not have to change our line of reasoning, no matter who approaches us from one side or the other. That is the great advantage of basing one's belief and one's reasoning on the explicit declaration of God's Book.

F. D. N.

Christ's Coming

Looking for and Hastening Unto the Coming of the Day of God

As never before in all history, world conditions testify that the coming of the Lord is near. Said the Saviour:

"Now learn a parable of the fig tree: When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." Matt. 24:32-34.

Evidently "this generation" of verse 34 was not the generation living when our Lord uttered those words. That generation did not see "all these things;" but the generation now living does see all the signs foretold by our Saviour. Our Lord's prophecy covered many generations, beginning with the generation then living and covering the entire time down to and including Christ's second coming, the resurrection of the righteous dead, and their being taken to heaven, as described in 1 Thessalonians 4:15-17.

The generation living when our Lord uttered the solemn words of His prophecy, saw the destruction of Jerusalem and the scattering abroad of those of its people who were not put to death by the victorious Romans. Subsequent signs have been seen adown the centuries as they have occurred; and today we, of the present generation, see them all in the light of prophecy and history, and as we now read current history we can see clearly the closing scenes so graphically described by our Lord nineteen centuries ago.

We are all familiar with the story of the dark day, Friday, May 19, 1780. Concerning that day the poet Whittier wrote:

"Men prayed, and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom blast of the trumpet shatter
The black sky, that the dreadful face of Christ
Might look from the rent clouds, not as He looked
A loving guest at Bethany, but stern
As Justice and inexorable Law."

Our Lord also said, "The moon shall not give her light." The night following the dark day was one of intense darkness; though the moon was at the full, no ray of light reached the earth. Horses refused to move, as they could not see even the ground upon which they stood. Never before nor since has there been a night of such intense darkness, in the time of a full moon.

Our Lord said also, "The stars shall fall from heaven." This sign was seen on November 13, 1833: Commenting upon Matthew 24:29, as long ago as 1697, Dr. Thomas Burnet, fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, England, said: "No doubt there will be all sorts of fiery meteors at that time; and amongst others, those which are called falling stars." And that is what occurred on the early morning of November 13, 1833.

Today we are seeing signs that bring us still closer to the end of all things earthly. Not only are such signs foretold in the scriptures already cited, but in Luke still more significant signs are mentioned:

"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Luke 21:25, 26.

In Revelation 11:18 we have mention of another last-day sign, namely, the anger of the nations. The whole text reads thus:

"The nations were angry, and Thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that Thou shouldst give reward unto Thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear Thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth."

Yea, the nations are angry, and the world stands in awe as men everywhere contemplate with fearful dread the possibilities, or rather the strong probabilities, of the near future when the "dogs of war" shall be unleashed, as described in Jeremiah 25:31-33 in these words:

"A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations, He will plead with all flesh; He will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the Lord. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth. And the slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth: they shall not be lamented, neither gathered, nor buried; they shall be dung upon the ground."

But before the Lord comes to destroy those who "destroy the earth," the judgment will have decided who are worthy of eternal life, and who of the living and of the dead shall eventually suffer the second death. The judgment that decides the destiny of all who have ever lived or who shall yet live to see the end of this present evil world, is described in Daniel 7:9, 10, in these words:

"I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of His head like the pure wool: His throne was like the fiery flame, and His wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before Him: thousand thousands ministered unto Him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before Him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened."

The several phases of the judgment are described in other texts of Scripture, as, for instance, Matthew 25:31-46; 1 Thessalonians 4:13-17; Revelation 20:11-15. These, and other texts that might be cited, refer to one great general judgment in its several phases, including the investigative judgment mentioned in Daniel 7:9, 10, and the judgment in both its investigative and executive phases as described in the twentieth chapter of Revelation.

Oh, that we might all realize that we are now in the first phase of the judgment, and that as that judgment leaves us, so will the final announcement by the Judge of all the earth overtake us.

C. P. B.

How Greek Catholics Found the Sabbath in the Book

OVER in Transylvania, a part of Rumania, the Orthodox Greek people have a little tract that contains a traditional dream of the virgin Mary. Whoever reads and circulates it, they say, merits the forgiveness of sin. One of our workers, J. Reit, tells how a search for one of these tracts led an elderly woman to find the Bible. And this Bible brought forth a company of Sabbathkeepers, whom he had organized into a flourishing Sabbath school. He wrote:

"An old woman in a certain village longed greatly for the forgiveness of her sins. So she set off to the nearest town in search of one of these treasured booklets containing Mary's dream. One bookseller professed her instead a Bible.

"Is that a holy book?" she inquired.

"Yes, it is the most holy Book of all," replied the bookseller.

"With great joy in her heart, she took the 'Book' home.

"Arriving back in her village, she went to the priest. Had she told him that she had bought the 'Book' from a colporteur, he would have condemned it at once. But when she said that she had bought it in an Orthodox bookshop, he fervently gave her his blessing, saying, 'Blessed are they who read the "Book," and do everything that is written therein.'

"The woman went to her home, and told the story to her daughter-in-law, showing her the precious 'Book.' They called in their neighbors, and in the evenings they would all read the Bible together. It interested them greatly. Every evening until far into the night, they would read in the 'Book.' One day, when looking it through, they found the ten commandments, with the Sabbath commandment included. They were greatly troubled, and could not understand why they were keeping Sunday. Then a very old woman who was meeting with them told them that it must be right to keep the Sabbath, because she remembered that when she was still a very little girl an old priest lived in the village who used to hold a Sabbath service all alone in the church every Sabbath; and he said that the Sabbath was a holy day, but that people had turned away from the true faith. So this group decided that they would keep the Sabbath.

"Later it became known in all the village that some of the people were reading in a 'Book,' and were keeping the Sabbath. At that time a man came from another village, and visited these people, deriding and insulting them, saying that they were 'Pocaits.' (The literal translation of this word is "converted." It is used in Rumania when speaking of the Adventists.) They said, 'Why, no, we have had nothing to do with the "Pocaits." We have read all this in the "Book."' The man replied, 'Well, you are doing just what these "Pocaits" are doing.' They then decided that they would try to find the 'Pocaits,' and learn what they really were doing. So on a certain Sabbath they went over the mountain to another village to visit the 'Pocaits.' When they arrived, they saw that our members had 'Books' exactly like the one the woman had showed them; and they stayed the whole day while our members explained the truth to them."

Soon after, J. Reit visited these new believers. He later reported a baptism, and the organization of a church.

W. A. S.

Found Holding to the Sabbath All Alone

ONE of our colporteur evangelists in Canada, Miss Millie Fisher, found a young servant girl, who had begun to keep the Sabbath in Europe, and had held fast to the truth, although she supposed herself all alone in her faith.

It was in 1930 that our worker called at a home in Canada. After some talk about our message, the woman of the house said: "I have a hired girl, a Slovakian, who is very much like you Seventh-day Adventists."

The woman called the girl and said to her, "Marie, you are an Adventist, are you not?"

"Oh, no, no," Marie exclaimed in broken English, "I no Adventist. I keep Sabbath like Jews."

Our worker drew out from her the story. She was born in Europe, her father was a Catholic, her mother a Lutheran. Marie read her mother's Bible, and became so convinced that the seventh day was the Sabbath that she began to keep it. It brought her into trial, all round; and on this account she migrated to Canada, looking for a place of greater liberty.

"I will not work on Sabbath," she told our colporteur sister. "They can take my heart out, but I will not keep Sunday."

"How did you learn that?" she was asked. "Did you attend Adventist meetings in Europe? or have Adventist neighbors?"

"I tell you truly," she answered, "I never had one person tell me. The Bible only is what I read. I just studied and prayed. Sometimes all was dark, and then after I had studied a long time the Holy Spirit would give me light."

She rejoiced greatly when told that there were thousands of others keeping the Sabbath, as she did. "Sister," she said, "you don't know how happy you have made my heart. God surely sent you to me."

Who knows how many others, all over the earth, have been stirred up by the Spirit in the search for truth, and are now waiting only for contact with some teacher of the full message?

W. A. S.

EDITORIAL

The Mixture Pouring Into the Cup

WHAT a mixture of error is held forth for men to drink in Christendom and pagandom. It is the ancient story repeated.

The children of Noah knew the true God. But quickly after the flood came the apostasy of Babel. Then great Babylon grew up and was the primitive source from which the ancient nations derived many of the false systems of religion. "Babylon hath been a golden cup," wrote the prophet, "that made all the earth drunken." Jer. 51:7.

Now the New Testament prophecy pictures a Babylonian confusion of error and perverted truth in the last days, with the unwary in all nations drinking of the cup of mixture. Many voices are warning of it today.

Recently the world leaders of Congregationalism, of both Europe and America, issued a call to their people to be on guard "in these days of peril and pagan trends at home and abroad."

In Germany the old-style higher criticism in pulpits and universities undermined faith, and now movements are on foot to restore a modified paganism, open and avowed. Evangelicals are resisting, but one sees signs on every side of the expanding pagan trend.

The other day Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, from his Riverside Drive pulpit, was reported by the New York Times as warning that the spirit of the old pagan cults was all abroad today in America. He said:

"Do not leave the matter stranded overseas. No ancient city that Paul traveled through, filled with temples to the deities of the pantheon, was more replete with altars than is this modern world. The gods are on the field—Venus and Bacchus, yes, but more than that, Mars, Mercury, Mammon, and the deified Caesar requiring that men burn incense unto him."

And most serious of all, the divinely established bulwark of God's holy law is being set aside in many quarters.

A survey by an evangelical committee studying influences tending to draw youth away from religion, reported on the moving-picture standards:

"The Bible standard is not recognized, and the ten commandments are frequently flouted."

But in many pulpits today the ten commandments are being not only flouted, but openly attacked. The old Bibliotheca Sacra review, that once we counted as standing for fundamental principles, declares now:

"The ten commandments were not for all mankind, but for Israel alone."

And referring to Christians who obey the fourth commandment, the article continues:

"Does it not show the perversion of thinking of some men that they should lay most stress on the fourth commandment, when it is totally done away by God?"

Equally, of course, all the ten commandments must then be "totally done away," though the writer endeavors to find nine of them restored in various epistles of Paul!

Such language would have been shocking to the old Bible-believing founders who wrote the doctrinal standards of the Reformation churches. The moving pictures flaunt the divine law, but some modern pulpits openly attack it. No theatrical flaunting of God's law can ever bear so evil a fruitage.

What a mixture is pouring into the cup for the younger generation to drink! James Truslow Adams, the well-known essayist and historical writer, well cries out:

"The older generation was taught that God gave certain commands. . . . It is useless to tell that to a young person today. . . . We of the older generation have played with ideas and let loose forces the power of which we little dreamed of. We have, indeed, sowed the wind, and it will be those of the younger generation who will reap the whirlwind."—Atlantic Monthly.

Truly a sad mixture of reviving paganism and perversion of Christian fundamentals is flowing into the cup today. It is a summons to us to lift up the message of the "everlasting gospel" of Revelation 14, with its warning against drinking of the last-day Babylonian mixtures of error and its call to all men to "keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."

W. A. S.

A Paradoxical Age

As Pictured in Prophecy

WHEN we take the prophecies concerning conditions in the last days and place them side by side, they make a strange, composite picture. The sharp contrasts in the different specifications are so paradoxical that the incredulous are led to doubt the statements. The prophecies are not written as man would conceive them. This is a strong evidence that they were divinely inspired. And as we endeavor to match the true picture which we see today with the prophetic picture, the divine element stands out very clearly, for the various parts, like a picture puzzle, perfectly match the original portrait outlined in the Scriptures.

As one takes the signs separately, there does not seem to be anything distinctive in most of them that would mark off the last days in a definite manner. However, the fact that so many signs of such varied form are given and that they must match one another in one generation—this is the significant part in the fulfillment of prophecy today.

The Greatest Sign

There are those who repeat over and over again that they cannot see how wars, or even earthquakes, could be a sign of the last days, because there have always been wars and earthquakes. These skeptics, who delight in nothing better than to undermine the hope of the advent belief, feel that when they have said this, nothing more is to be said. But we must remember that God seldom uses a miracle to convince men of the truthfulness of His word, for there is enough in divine revelation to convince sincere men of its inspiration if they will only give time to prayer and study.

We remember that in Christ's day the Pharisees asked for a special sign to be given them, so that they might be convinced that Jesus was the Messiah, but He declared that no such sign as they desired would be given them. Of these He said, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead." Luke 16:31.

Christ did perform miracles, but the greatest miracle was the manner of His life and death, which in every respect fitted into the prophetic picture of the promised Messiah. It is also true that miracles have been performed to mark off the period known as "the time of the end," such as the "dark day" of 1780, and the great meteoric shower in 1833. But the greatest proof that we are living in the last days is the manner in which present-day happenings fit so perfectly into the predictions of Christ and the prophets, even though those predictions point out many things which in themselves are not rare phenomena.

The paradoxes of this age are the most convincing proof that we are living in the last days concerning which the Inspired Word has spoken. Let us note some of these paradoxes briefly.

1. Light and Darkness. As we read the statements in the Bible concerning the last days, we are impressed with the strong contrasts of great light and extreme darkness in the picture of conditions in the world preceding the advent of Christ. This is intensified more than would ordinarily be done by human devisings. Side by side with great spiritual light and scientific light we read "lawlessness" will "abound," and "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse." This is not logical, but many scholars are observing that men today are not acting rationally. Philip Gibbs, the well-known writer, calls it "the complete abnegation . . . of the higher intelligence." Men today have the knowledge to do better and the facilities to do better, but they are taking the road to destruction with their eyes open. They are deliberately facing racial suicide. Silas Bent, in "Machine Made Man," says, "On every hand we hear the plaint that man is a Frankenstein, and has created a monster which will destroy him. Civilization is about to commit suicide."

It is very evident that the extremes of good and evil, light and darkness, are more manifest today than ever before in the life of man.

2. Peace and War. There have always been those who are lovers of peace and those who delight in war, but we may reasonably doubt whether there has ever been a time when the great nations have so generally built up great and powerful war machines in the name of peace. Today, all wars are fought in the name of peace. We are continually hearing the words, "to secure the peace of Europe," or "to secure the peace of East Asia." Nations in the past went forth to war without excuse. They could do so because the world was large, and they were able to work in the dark. But today it is different. Every move of a nation is watched, heralded far and wide, and criticized. Today we have new standards of right and wrong. The days when a nation could plunder and destroy with impunity because it was strong have passed; so now nations must find some excuse for "lawless" acts. Let us remember that just eleven years ago, fifteen nations signed the Pact of Paris to "outlaw war."

George Lansbury, the noted British labor leader, exclaims, "Imagine it! All nations are pledged against war; all claim to be ardent and sincere in their desire for peace; and at the same time each nation sets to work piling up the most bestial and effective means for pursuing war. This is called being a realist. I call it lunacy of the worst description—because it is conscious lunacy."

No generation in the past has called so many peace conferences, set up so much peace machinery, and at the same time entered into war preparation and stirred up the war spirit with such tremendous determination. In large sections of the earth the whole population is being regimented for war purposes, and that in the name of "peace and security." What strange contradiction! What a colossal paradox! But is not this what the prophets have spoken? Read Isaiah's (chapter 2) and Micah's (chapter 4) prophecies concerning peace movements in the last days, and then turn to Joel's (chapter 3) and Christ's (Matthew 24) and John's (Revelation 16) predictions concerning war. Note how well the varied parts of the Scripture puzzle now match together.

The Problem of Abundance

3. Abundance and Famine. Many have wondered how famines could be a sign of the last days. Have there not always been famines? From ancient times drouth and flood have caused many to starve. But is famine reasonable today? Two million may be facing starvation in China because of drouth. Years ago the world would have been ignorant of their plight. But now news of the disaster may be communicated to all parts of the world and supplies rushed into the area by steamer and train. The famine may be stayed. The abundance of one part of the world could easily offset the dire need of another part. This is a possibility only now realizable.

But does the world respond in this manner? No! Jealousy, greed, indifference, war, trade barriers, civil strife, deliberate neglect, are more active than the spirit of benevolence and helpfulness, even in this age of boasted enlightenment. The tragedy is emphasized by the fact that science

BY THE FAMILY FIRESIDE

Conducted by Ruth Conard

Introduction to Know Your Church History

By STELLA PARKER PETERSON

A GROUP of Seventh-day Adventists sat one evening, looking over the pictures in an old album. Many of the pictures were of early pioneers in the advent movement, and as the elderly host turned the pages, he asked his guests to identify them. He was astonished! Here were church members of long standing, here were college graduates from our schools, here were children, and scarcely one of them could identify J. N. Loughborough, or Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, or E. H. Gates. Names which at one time were household words in every Seventh-day Adventist home, had faded with the years.

As the host told experiences of those early days, the guests in his home sat fascinated.

"Why, I never dreamed our history was so interesting!" one young woman exclaimed, after hearing the story of the "Pitcairn."

None of the younger guests had ever heard of the Haskell Orphans' Home, which at one time was a project of prime interest to every Seventh-day Adventist.

The elderly brother thought something should be done about it.

How much do you know about your denomination? Can you tell, without pause, when the denomination received its name; who was the first president of the General Conference; what was the first heathen land entered?

We are told by the Spirit of prophecy that "we have nothing to fear for the future, except as we shall forget the way the Lord has led us, and His teaching in our past history;" so it is well that we often refresh our minds concerning the marvelous and providential circumstances which surround the early history of our church. Such a review of our denominational history deepens our confidence in the message, deepens our own appreciation of what it means to be a part of the movement which God has ordained to finish His work in the world.

Beginning with this issue, the REVIEW is presenting a series of tests on Seventh-day Adventist history. It is hoped that whether you are old or young, you will find it both interesting and profitable to check your knowledge of your church's history.

The questions and illustrations will lend themselves not only to individual use, but to family and Missionary Volunteer Society and social-group use. Especially is the series recommended for use in the family circle on Sabbath afternoon.

The sources from which material for this series is drawn are—

"Life Sketches," White.

"The Great Controversy," White.

"Origin and Progress of Seventh-day Adventists," Olsen.

(Continued on page 18)

KNOW YOUR CHURCH HISTORY

"WE have nothing to fear for the future, except as we shall forget the way the Lord has led us, and His teaching in our past history."—"Life Sketches," p. 196.

1. Our denominational name is correctly spelled {
a. Seventh Day Adventist
b. Seventh-Day Adventist
c. Seventh-day Adventist
 2. Our denominational name was adopted in {
a. 1844
b. 1860
c. 1874
 3. The great fundamental doctrine which started the advent movement was {
a. the second coming of Christ
b. the Sabbath
c. the gospel to all the world
 4. The first public lecture in America on the expectation of the second advent was preached in August, {
a. 1831
b. 1833
c. 1844 in a {
d. church
e. school
f. kitchen by {
g. Josiah Litch
h. William Miller
i. Joshua V. Himes
 5. On November 13, 1833, occurred the {
a. Lisbon earthquake
b. Dark Day
c. falling of the stars } one of the signs of Christ's second coming.
- which gave great impetus to the advent movement.

STELLA PARKER PETERSON.

(Answers on page 22)

"The bell rang, and the train started out in the darkness, but it had gone only about three miles when it began to jerk backward and forward and tip sideways. Hastily they raised the window and looked out. They saw the car in front standing on end, and the air was filled with cries and groans. The engine, too, was lying off the track. But the car in which they were riding was on the track, and was back from the wreckage about one hundred feet. The express car was crushed to pieces, but the baggage car, which held a big trunk of books and papers belonging to Mr. White, was only slightly damaged, and the trunk was safe.

"The car in which Mr. White had first found seats was crushed, and the wreckage, together with the injured people, was thrown on each side of the track."

Elder and Mrs. White were able to secure a carriage, and went to the home of some Adventists, who lived near by, for the night.

"The next morning they all went back to see the wreck. They found that a large ox had lain down on the track, and when the engine struck it, the train left the track. The car in which Mr. and Mrs. White had been riding was standing back by itself. It had been uncoupled from the rest of the train, and the coupling bolt with its chain was lying on the platform of the car, as though it had been placed there. But the brakeman had not been there, and it was a mystery to the trainmen how it could have happened.

"As Mr. and Mrs. White looked at the crushed cars and the overturned engine and then at the last two cars standing safe and undamaged, they said, 'God does hear prayer. His angel must have uncoupled that car and preserved the lives of His servants.'"

A famous artist has painted a picture which shows how Jesus guards even the little children from harm. The picture shows two children, who have been picking wild flowers. In looking for the pretty blossoms, they have wandered near the edge of a precipice, and are so much interested in what they are doing that they have not noticed the abyss just in front of them. One little child has caught sight of a colorful butterfly, and is reaching out almost over the cliff to catch it, and is in grave danger. The artist has pictured a beautiful guardian angel just behind the children, whom Jesus has sent to protect them. The angel is watching the children closely, and his hands are stretched out to hold them back if they step too far out toward the edge of the cliff.

Boys and girls, Jesus, our Guiding Light, is watching over each one of us. If we are true to Him, whenever we are in danger, He will send a guardian angel to protect us.

It is only when we keep our eyes on Him—as the airplane pilot keeps looking at the beacon lights he is following, and the captain of the ship watches the lighthouse—and do just what He wants us to do, that He can guide us and guard us. Shall we not say thank you to Jesus for being our Guiding Light, and ask Him to help us to keep our eyes on Him and follow His directions?

(Lesson II, Sunday, December 7)

Signposts

BLACKBOARD TEXT: "When ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors." Matt. 24:33.

SUGGESTIVE SONGS: No. 96, "Missionary Volunteer Songs;" No. 200, "Gospel in Song."

You have taken automobile trips with father and mother or with friends to a distant town or city, haven't you? If you had never traveled that road before, you had a guidebook that told you just how to get there. And then, as you neared your destination, you watched the roadside, as the car whizzed along, to read the signposts which told just how much farther it was to the city to which you were going. Maybe the first sign you saw read, "75 miles to Journey's End," or whatever was the name of the place where you were going. Then a little later there would be another sign, "50 miles to Journey's End." Then "30 miles," then "25 miles." And as you came nearer to your destination, the signs were closer together. Twenty miles—15 miles—10 miles—8 miles. And thus it went until finally you saw a big sign that read, "Welcome to Journey's End." And you felt like shouting, you were so happy to have reached your destination.

Yesterday, you remember, we mentioned a journey we are taking over a dangerous, dark road. It is a tiresome trip, and we shall be very glad to get to the end of the journey, and we are anxious to know whether we are getting close to the end. And, children, we can know when our journey is almost over. We have a guidebook which tells us just how to get there, and which describes some signboards we shall see toward the close of our journey. That guidebook is the Bible, and the signboards are the signs about which the prophets of old wrote.

Let's talk about some of these signboards, and see how many of them we have already passed. First of all, get out your Bibles, and I will give you some references which tell about these signs. [Give out the following texts, one to each child, as far as they will go: Dan. 12:4; Matt. 24:29; Matt. 24:7, first part; Matt. 24:7, last part; Matt. 24:12; Matt. 24:14; Matt. 24:30.]

[NOTE.—The signboards mentioned in the following paragraphs can be as elaborate or as simple as the one in charge wishes to make them. A good placard can be made from a piece of cardboard 11 by 16 inches, and this size will show up well. The pictures on them can be drawn, if someone of artistic talent is available. Otherwise pictures can be found for most of them in newspapers and magazines, and pasted on the cardboard "signboards." For sign No. 6, a picture of Christ's second coming might be found in one of our denominational periodicals, or just the words, "Second Coming of Jesus," could be printed on the cardboard.]

1. Increased Knowledge of Bible. [Placard showing someone reading Bible, or a modern printing press.] Please read Daniel 12:4.

One of the signs that we are coming to the end of our journey on earth is that people will be seeking to know more about the Bible. More people will read it. It will no longer be, as this verse says, a "sealed" book. This is certainly true today.' In recent years Bible students have learned much about the Scriptures. Many more people have been reading the Bible since the printing press was invented, and Bibles have been more easily obtainable. Also, the Bible has been translated into many languages; so people in almost every country in the world can now read the word of God in their own language. And the modern inventions of trains, airplanes, automobiles, ships, etc., have made it possible to carry the Scriptures rapidly to all parts of the world.

B. PLOCKHORST, ARTIST

THE GUARDIAN ANGEL

Let us put all the signs which we have already passed over here. We shall stand this sign up here and see how many more we have to add to it.

2. Signs in the Heavens. [Placard showing pictures of dark day and falling of stars, or merely drawings of sun, moon, and stars.] Please read Matthew 24:29.

On May 19, 1780, at about ten o'clock in the morning, it began to get dark all over New England and up into Canada. It became just like night, and people had to light lamps and candles to do their work. The chickens went to roost. It remained dark all the rest of that day, and when night came, the moon was a red color. It was so black everywhere that night that "a sheet of white paper held within a few inches of the eyes" could not be seen.

Once in a while nowadays we see a "shooting star" streak across the sky. But on November 13, 1833, stars shot across the heavens in such great numbers that it looked as though all the stars were falling right down to earth. People over almost all the United States saw these stars falling, and many persons were very much frightened, thinking that the end of the world had come. The stars continued to shoot across the sky until morning.

So we have passed this sign.

3. Wars and Rumors of Wars. [Placard with a large picture of soldiers marching, or of warships, or of fighting equipment.] Now let's read the first part of Matthew 24:7.

I am sure that none of us has missed seeing this signboard. It is very large and very sad. The great wars in Europe and Asia have involved directly or indirectly every country in the whole world. Thousands of people have been killed. Surely we are thankful that this sign means that we shall soon be at the end of the journey through this world, where there is so much sadness.

4. Pestilences, Earthquakes, Storms. [Picture of an earthquake or a bread line.] Shall we read the last part of Matthew 24:7?

A pestilence is a disease which kills many people. The influenza was a terrible pestilence a few years ago. Many, many people died from it. And as for famines, in the war-stricken countries many children, and grown people as well, have died because they have had very little to eat. During the last few years there have been a great number of earthquakes all over the world, when the ground underneath towns and cities rocked and broke open, toppling over many great tall buildings and killing thousands of people. So we have certainly passed this signboard.

5. Gospel to All the World. [Picture of the Bible would be good for this signboard.] Now shall we read Matthew 24:14?

Who can tell me how many continents there are? That's right, there are six—North America, South America, Europe, Africa, Asia, and Australia. And in every one of these continents, boys and girls, our missionaries are telling people about Jesus' soon coming. They are right now going to every nation of earth. A country 'way over in the middle of Asia—Tibet—has been one of the last countries into which our missionaries have gone, but now they are telling the gospel story even there. We have now come to this signpost, and will set it up beside the others. Notice what the last part of Matthew 24:14 says, "And then shall the end come." That means that this is the very last milepost that we shall see before we reach the city limits, we might say, of the place to which we are going.

6. Coming of Jesus.

The very next signboard is the one which tells us that we have reached our destination, the one which says, "Welcome to Journey's End." That signboard is told about in Matthew 24:30. Please read that text.

Yes, children, it is the sign of the Son of man in heaven. [Show last placard.] For the reason Jesus is coming to this earth again is to welcome each one of us who has completed the journey, to the beautiful home which He is preparing for us.

And knowing that this last sign is coming very, very soon, we want to watch for it all the time, so that we shall be ready for it when it does come.

(Lesson III, Monday, December 8)

Lighting Up the Home

BLACKBOARD TEXT: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Matt. 5:16.

SUGGESTIVE SONGS: No. 71 or 77, "Missionary Volunteer Songs;" No. 110 or 112, "Gospel in Song."

A thin, ragged little boy crouched in the small patch of sunlight that found its way down into the narrow, dirty street. Tall, dilapidated tenement buildings towered on either side. In his hand the boy held a broken piece of looking glass, so that the rays of sunshine struck it.

"What are you doing, my boy?" At the sound of the voice, the little fellow looked up, startled, into the kindly eyes of a well-dressed stranger.

"Well, you see, sir," explained the little fellow, after a pause, "my little sister is lying sick in bed over behind that window"—pointing to a fifth-floor window. "She's been there for more than five months now. The sun never comes into that room. And the sunlight was so grand this afternoon that I thought it might cheer her up to see some of it; so I'm trying to throw a sunbeam with this looking glass over onto the wall of her room."

Boys and girls, that little boy was doing his best to brighten up his poor home. Are we doing as much to bring light and happiness into our homes? None of us are very large, and so we can't do big things in our homes, but we surely can cast one little ray of light. And our ray of light, combined with the other rays of light shed about by all the other members of the family, will make a bright, cheery, happy home.

Not having light even in the little corners of a home may cause much trouble. One little electric-light bulb went out one day on the cellar stairway of a home. It was not a very bright light anyway, and nobody bothered to replace it for several days. Father or mother or any of the children who wanted to go down to the cellar would just feel his way down without a light. Their one day mother was in a hurry to get a can of peaches for supper, and she opened the cellar door and hurried down the steps. She did not take as much care as usual, and, because it was so dark, she missed her footing about halfway down and fell, breaking her hip. She had to stay in bed for many months, caged up in a painful cast, all because the little electric-light bulb had not been shining on the stairs.

Moths, those little creatures which cause so much damage by eating wool and fur, like to work in the dark. A friend of mine had a very nice chair with a beautiful tapestry back. She prized this chair very highly. It stood over in one corner of her parlor, and she always kept the window shade by it pulled down, so that it would not get too much sun. But the moths found this nice dark corner to work in, and they ate many little holes in the beautiful tapestry cloth which formed the back of the chair. If even a few little bright rays of sun could have reached the chair, the moths probably would never have done the damage they did.

You see, a light doesn't have to be big to be important. Sometimes when our electric lights go out at home, we get out some candles and light them, so that we can go on with our work.

Boys and girls, of course, can't be the lighthouses or the airplane beacons which we talked about the other day, but they are needed as little lamps or candles in the home. What can we do to be little lights in our homes? Oh, I know we can think of ever so many things. Won't you name some of them for me?

I'll start you out. Doing the dishes for mother is one way we can let our light shine at home. That doesn't seem like a very important thing to do, but if we do the dishes cheerfully and promptly, that will go a long, long way toward brightening up home, especially when mother is tired, and has had a big washing to do, or when the baby has been sick.

The General Conference Building as It Appears Today, and the Presidents of the General Conference, Left to Right, Top Row: John Byington, May 21, 1863, to May 17, 1865; James White, May 17, 1865, to May 14, 1867; J. N. Andrews, May 14, 1867, to May 12, 1868; James White, May 12, 1868, to December 29, 1871; George I. Butler, December 29, 1871, to August 10, 1874; James White, August 10, 1874, to October 6, 1880; George I. Butler, October 6, 1880, to October 17, 1888; O. A. Olsen, October 17, 1888, to February 19, 1897. Bottom Row: G. A. Irwin, February 19, 1897, to April 2, 1901; A. C. Daniells, April 2, 1901, to May 11, 1922; W. A. Spicer, May 11, 1922 to May 28, 1930; C. H. Watson, May 28, 1930, to May 26, 1936; J. L. McElhany, May 26, 1936 to — longer believes in the Bible story of a literal creation of the world in six literal days.

The Second Coming of Christ

(Continued from page 7)

The church has also espoused the pantheistic theory that God is not a personal being dwelling in heaven, but merely the intangible force seen everywhere in nature. He is no longer worshiped as a Supreme Being. He is no longer accepted as a great, all-wise, all-powerful Personage by whose will and power alone the things of nature were brought into being and do now exist, but He is made to be only an integral part of nature. His presence is seen in the wind, the rain, the grass, the trees, in the animals, in man. This concept of God has so successfully removed Him from our view that to many He no longer matters.

Such doctrines as the atonement, faith, repentance, and conversion have long since been given up by the great mass of Christians, because, say the leaders, "We cannot accept the teaching that one person can save another. Man must save himself or perish."

Centuries ago the psalmist exclaimed, "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" Ps. 11:3. What, indeed, but surrender their faith and drift back into the sins of the world?

The Apostasy Is Here

Is the church in such a state of apostasy today? We shall permit others to answer the question.

The editor of the Watchman-Examiner, sensing the reasons for the calamities which have befallen us, writes:

"We believe that the fundamental causes of the world chaos are spiritual and religious. At no equal period of history have men been more self-sufficient than in the past twenty years. The materialistic theory of evolution has probably done as much as anything to weaken the hold of religious convictions upon the mind of the average modern man. It has built into him a scientific assurance and a lust for material things which have crowded out moral and spiritual considerations and led to a tragic decline of faith. It has erected within him confidence as to his ability to redeem himself out of all his troubles. The result has been a decline of the sense of sin, the need of a Saviour, and humility before God."—Watchman-Examiner, June 4, 1942.

"To speak of God nowadays needs courage. To deny Him is more fashionable, or rather, not to think about Him at all. The attainments of our material civilization, judged by the human standard, appear so great that men do not feel the need of believing in God. . . . How many people today say grace even silently in their heart before a meal? Why should they, when they believe that their food is created for them by the butcher, the baker, and the grocer? Who are the statesmen of our time, who before a conference invoke divine aid? Why should they, when they have been taught that man is master of his destiny?"

"Humanity has come into a blind alley. Proud of their broadened knowledge, its leaders proclaimed the supremacy of the human mind. They made out that it was the divine principle itself. But transplanted into the collective mind of the mass, the atheism of the leaders only served to create a void. The leaders denied God and the masses forgot Him. That is how we have come to the present state of affairs. The masses, lulled into passivity by the much-advertised 'conquests' of civilization, have ceased to feel God's presence. It is the leaders who begin to sense the wall looming in front. Meanwhile the masses are in the hands of low propagandists."—Poliakoff, Europe in the Fourth Dimension, p. 57.

"We do not know where we are going or why, and we have almost given up the attempt to find out. We are in despair because the keys which were to open the gates of heaven have let us into a larger but more oppressive prison house. We thought those keys were science and the free intelligence of man. They have failed us. We have long since cast out God. To what can we now appeal?"—Doctor Hutchins, president of Chicago University, in A Manifesto of Christian Youth, by Dan Gilbert, p. 38.

Thus the apostasy is here in full bloom. And it serves as a clarion call to those who still fear God to prepare to meet Christ Jesus at His second coming. That great event is now at hand.

Other Great Signs

As the various Bible prophets were shown the conditions that were to exist in the world just prior to the return of Jesus, they recorded these in order that those who would be living at the time would recognize them as signs of the end. Our space will permit only a brief and passing mention of these.

1. There would be signs in the heavens. Matt. 24:29.

These predictions were fulfilled in the dark day of 1780 and the falling of the stars in 1833.

2. There would be changes in the physical world. Heb. 1:10-12, Luke 21:23-27.

3. Men would be given up to revelry and drunkenness, and would ignore the call to repentance. Luke 17:26-30.
4. Many would amass great riches while others would be poor and hungry. James 5:1-8; Isa. 8:21, 22, R. V.
5. Knowledge would be increased. Dan. 12:4.
6. Spiritualism would lead men to depart from the true faith. 1 Tim. 4:1-3; Rev. 13:13-16.
7. A terrible fear would fill the hearts of men. Luke 21:25-27.
8. A great wave of crime would sweep over the earth, and the courts of justice would be impotent to deal with the situation. Isa. 59:4-8, 14, 15; 2 Tim. 3:13.
9. Influenced by apostasy, men would scoff at those who declared these conditions to be signs of the coming of Jesus. 2 Peter 3:3, 4.
10. The Papacy would be revived and would again persecute those who keep the commandments and have the faith of Jesus. Rev. 13:11-18.

Today these things are no longer matters of prophecy only. They stand revealed before our astonished eyes in all their completeness. They constitute the signs of the coming of the Son of man, and they speak to the world in clarion tones that His coming is now even at the door. The zero hour is at hand.

Perhaps the most remarkable prophecy in the Bible is the one found in Matthew 24:14 and Isaiah 61:1-3, where we are told that at the very time when this dense moral darkness covers the earth God will send forth to all the nations of earth the glorious message that His coming is near, urging men everywhere to prepare for it.

A Great Unfinished Task

After the passing of the time, in 1844, when those who so confidently expected the Lord's return at that time were so sorely disappointed, there came to them the text: "And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings." Rev. 10:11.

The prophecies concerning the great Sabbath reform message, as found in Isaiah 58:12-14 and Revelation 14:6-12, that was to go to the world were still lying dormant. The great judgment-hour message, acquainting people with the fact that the judgment of God was then opening in heaven and that the moral law of ten commandments was to be the standard by which men would be tried, had not been preached, though John was told that it was to be heralded to every tribe and kindred on earth.

"I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to Him; for the hour of His judgment is come: and worship Him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Rev. 14:6, 7, 12.

Here, then, lay before the church a gigantic, untouched task. A world was to be warned of the judgment that was in session. A world was to be stirred by a clarion call to return to the true God, "fear . . . Him that made heaven and earth," and keep His holy law and Sabbath. And, as a result of this warning message, a people would be gathered out of the nations and tribes of earth that would keep His commandments and have the faith of Jesus.

At that time—a century ago—the first faint cry of this great reform message was beginning to be heard. It was hardly more than a whisper. But today as we look back from our end of the century, we are led

(Continued on page 62)

When God's people are endued with the Holy Spirit and the world is encircled with "an atmosphere of grace," then these waiting, seeking, longing ones shall learn of the truth and accept it.

Let us note some statements that tell us of the results of the mighty work that shall take place under the loud cry. We are told that rulers of the land "will have an opportunity to receive the truth, and some of them will be converted, and endure with the saints through the time of trouble" (Testimonies, Vol. I, p. 203); that "God will add to the ranks of His people men of ability and influence who are to act their part in warning the world" (Gospel Workers, p. 347); that "many, both ministers and people [from the popular churches], will gladly accept those great truths which God has caused to be proclaimed at this time" (The Great Controversy, p. 464); that "many who have strayed from the fold will come back to follow the great Shepherd" (Testimonies, Vol. VI, p. 401); and that those who have long been bound by wives, husbands, or parents, but who have known the truth, will fear their relatives no longer and accept the truth (see Early Writings, p. 271).

As to the numbers that will be brought in under the loud cry, we are told that "a work similar to that which the Lord did through His delegated messengers after the day of Pentecost He is waiting to do today" (Testimonies, Vol. VII, p. 33); that "the great work of the gospel is not to close with less manifestation of the power of God than marked its opening" (The Great Controversy, p. 611); that "more than one thousand will soon be converted in one day" (as reported by D. T. Bourdeau in Review and Herald, Nov. 10, 1885); that the harvest will be an abundant one (Testimonies, Vol. VIII, p. 242); and that "tribe after tribe from the ranks of the enemy united with the command-keeping people of God" (Id., p. 41).

Former Rain Experience Needed

How are the believers to be equipped to do this mighty work? The latter rain is closely connected with the loud cry. It is the special baptism of the Holy Spirit upon those who are ready for it that fits the saints to quickly finish the work. We are told that "the 'latter rain,' or refreshing from the presence of the Lord, will come, to give power to the loud voice of the third angel, and prepare the saints to stand in the period when the seven last plagues shall be poured out."—Early Writings, p. 86.

That which qualifies the believers to do a mighty work in the last days is that which prepares them to go safely through the time of trouble. It is the repetition of the Pentecostal experience that does this. We cannot give an exposition of the early and latter rain. But we wish to point out that in spiritual experience the saints must first have been baptized by the early rain—that is, obtain the experience of forgiveness, justification, and complete cleansing—before they can hope to receive the power of the latter rain. We read:

"Many have in a great measure failed to receive the former rain. . . . They expect that lack to be supplied by the latter rain. . . . They are making a terrible mistake. . . . But there must be no neglect of the grace represented by the former rain. Only those who are living up to the light they have, will receive greater light. Unless we are daily advancing in the exemplification of the active Christian virtues, we shall not recognize the manifestations of the Holy Spirit in the latter rain. It may be falling on hearts all around us, but we shall not discern or receive it."—Testimonies to Ministers, p. 507.

These are solemn words. Let us make sure of the needed preparation, so that we may have a definite part in the glorious work that is to be done through the baptism of the Holy Spirit and under the loud cry.

For What Is God Waiting?

When is the loud cry of the message to be sounded? God is waiting for His people to receive the complete experience that is to come under the former rain, complete separation from sin and worldliness. He is also waiting for something else. While the people of God are preparing for this mighty work that is to close the work of the third angel, the affairs of the world are shaping for the final conflict with God's people. While the people of God are being clothed with the robe of righteousness, man's cup of iniquity is being filled to overflowing.

We cannot specify the exact time when the loud cry shall break forth, but we are given an indication as to when we may expect it soon to take place. Note the following from the Spirit of prophecy:

"As trials thicken around us, both separation and unity will be seen in our ranks. . . . Those who have had great light and precious privileges, but have not improved them, will, under one pretext or another, go out from us. . . . But, on the other hand, when the storm of persecution really breaks upon us, the true sheep will hear the true Shepherd's voice. . . . The people of God will draw together, and present to the enemy a united front. . . . Thus will the truth be brought into practical life. . . . The love of Christ, the love of the brethren, will testify to the world that we have been with Jesus and learned of Him. Then will the message of the third angel swell to a loud cry, and the whole earth will be lightened with the glory of the Lord."—Testimonies, Vol. VI, pp. 400, 401: (Italics mine.)

Surely that day of persecution and conflict is not far distant. It might possibly break out at any time. When the winds of strife and persecution are finally loosed, the enemies of God's people will find nothing to hinder the carrying out of their evil plottings. Those winds are now being held until God's people are ready for the mighty work God has for them to do and the special time of trouble that awaits them.

Almost every happening today cries out in persistent tones, "Get ready! Get ready!" As we come to the mightiest hour in earth's history, God grant, dear reader, that you will be ready—ready for that glorious upsurge of missionary activity that will finish the work, ready to stand in the presence of God.

Second Coming of Christ

(Continued from page 35)

to exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" In 810 languages and dialects, and in 413 countries and island groups, the great judgment-hour message is sounding, and people are being urged to prepare for the coming of Jesus and the setting up of His eternal kingdom. The whisper has become a "loud cry" and soon, very soon now, its work must be finished.

Then comes the end, for Christ Himself said, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Matt. 24:14.

Yes, Jesus is coming. There is no escaping this great and glorious truth, and His coming is to be not in the distant future but soon, very, very soon. "When ye shall see all these things," said Jesus, "know that it is near, even at the doors." Matt. 24:33.

We are one hundred years nearer that mighty event than were the pioneers of this advent movement when they first began to sound the message. They faced the beginning of a great world task; we face its consummation. May God help us to sense all that this means to us! And may we, by faith, lay hold of the great salvation offered, and prepare to meet our God.

Looking Down the Highway of the Centuries

By ROBERT LEO ODOM

AS never before, the gaze of humanity is focused on the future. We all know that it is fraught with things important. Edition after edition of the daily papers is rushed to the streets to tell us the latest happenings at home and abroad. Throughout the day and the night the radio flings to the four winds its news broadcasts to keep us informed about what is taking place in the world.

Some commentators speak of the plans for the future as they are discussed in the councils of the nations, and a few even venture to conjecture about the possible course of events for tomorrow. But in all this, mankind is steadily marching toward the dark unknown, blindly feeling its way along, and inquiring what the future may hold in store for this bleeding, war-torn world.

Astrologers, clairvoyants, numerologists, and spirit mediums have found a profitable field of exploitation in the inquisitiveness of restless "hearts failing . . . for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Luke 21:26. Many are still asking that tantalizing question which so intrigued wise old Solomon, "Who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun?" Eccl. 6:12.

The problem of reading the future is too difficult for finite man. Only the Omniscient One can truthfully say, "I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like Me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done." Isa. 46:9, 10. To Him we must direct our query for light on the future.

Secular history is a record of memorable events that have occurred in the past, but sacred prophecy is a declaration of things to come. Bible prophecy is not of human origin, but was given by Him who knows the end from the beginning. "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." 2 Peter 1:21. It is the voice of God speaking about the future.

One of the most remarkable prophecies ever given to men came not through holy men of old but directly from the Master Prophet Himself, our Lord Jesus Christ.

Shortly before His death in A.D. 31, His disciples came to Him with a big question about the days to come, saying, "Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Matt. 24:3.

Then the Master fixed His prophetic gaze upon the highway of the coming centuries and pointed out beforehand to His followers some of the great milestones that humanity must pass before it should reach the end of the road. In His reply to their questioning, the Lord spoke of two classes of signs: (1) the general and (2) the specific. The general signs are such things as wars, rumors of wars, earthquakes, famines, pestilences, persecutions, riotous living, and the like. These have existed through the ages, becoming increasingly common as the end draws nearer. But the specific signs are definite in regard to time and place. They are fixed like great waymarks along earth's course, and we need only to note them in their historical order to know where we are on the journey.

Jerusalem Destroyed in A.D. 70

That which aroused the inquisitiveness of the disciples was the startling statement that Jesus had made when they left the temple in Jerusalem. For as they were leaving that sacred edifice to go to the Mount of Olives, they pointed out to Him the outstanding features of the great building. Then He said to them: "See ye not all these things? verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." Matt. 24:2. Here was a definite prediction referring to a specific building located in a specific place—the historical temple of Jerusalem.

Furthermore, He told them how that building would be destroyed. It was not to be laid low by an earthquake, nor by lightning, nor by men with plans to build a new and better one. He said: "When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. . . . There shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke 21:20-24.

In A.D. 70 the Roman armies, under the command of Titus, took the city of Jerusalem by storm after one of the most memorable sieges of history. More than a million Jews perished by famine and by the sword. The city and its beautiful temple were destroyed, the stones torn down, and the soil was plowed up for molten gold. Many thousands of Jews were sold as slaves in the marts of the world, and the people of Israel were scattered among the nations. There they are today, while the Gentiles, especially the Mohammedans, have had control of Jerusalem practically ever since.

Great Tribulation for the Church Foretold

Then looking on into the centuries following, the Lord foretold the trials of His church. He declared that there "shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Matt. 24:21, 22.

Daniel, the prophet, had already spoken of this period of great oppression, and Jesus specifically singled out that prophet's writings as being worthy of special study in this connection. "Whoso readeth, let him understand," He said. (Matt. 24:15.) He had foretold that God's people and His law would suffer abuse at the hands of the little-horn power, which we know to be the Roman Papacy, during the space of "a time and times and the dividing of time." (Dan. 7:24, 25.) This adds up to 1260 days of symbolic time. (Rev. 12:6, 14.) Since one day of symbolic time equals one year of literal time (Eze. 4:6; Num. 14:34), that period of terrible persecution about which Jesus spoke was to be 1260 years long.

In A.D. 533 the Roman emperor, Justinian, decreed that the Bishop of Rome should be supreme as "head of all the churches." By the defeat of the Arian Ostrogoths in 538, the armies of Justinian secured for the Papacy a permanent seat in the city of Rome. Thus in the year 538 the supremacy of the Papacy began. From that time forward God's people in Europe were under the rule of intolerance until the suppression of the Jesuit Society in 1773, and the breaking of the papal supremacy "at the time of Napoleon I, when the omnipotent emperor of the French occupied the pontifical state of Rome, sending the pope into exile, and incorporating his possession into the French Empire."—CARDINAL CERRETTI, "Life of Pope Pius XI," in the Atlanta (Georgia) Sunday American, Feb. 2, 1930.

The pope was taken prisoner by the armies of Napoleon on February 10, 1798. Thus the 1260 years of "great tribulation" for the people of God came to an end.

Describing the oppression caused by the domination of the Papacy during the Dark Ages, W. E. H. Lecky has said:

"That the church of Rome has shed more innocent blood than any other institution that ever existed among mankind, will be questioned by no Protestant who has a competent knowledge of history. The memorials, indeed, of many of her persecutions are now so scanty that it is impossible to form a complete conception of the multitude of her victims, and it is quite certain that no powers of imagination can adequately realize their sufferings."—History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe, Vol. II, p. 32.

The victims of that tribulation numbered many millions. The great religious reformation that swept over Europe in the sixteenth century rose up to break the spiritual hold of the Papacy on mankind. In those nations where the reform was practically extirpated, political atheism sprang up. Atheistic France, in 1793-98, struck a tremendous blow against the papal power, and later the people of Italy themselves rose up, in 1870, and deprived the pope of the last vestige of his temporal power.

The Dark Day of 1780

"But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." Mark 13:24. Thus Jesus pointed out another waymark along the highway of the centuries. The suppression of the Jesuit Society in 1773 brought a general letup to the campaign of persecution, which date lacked twenty-five years of reaching to the fall of the Papacy in 1798. Between 1773 and 1798, and "in those days," came the notable dark day of May 19, 1780. It is "so called on account of a remarkable darkness on that day extending over all New England. In some places persons could not see to read common print in the open air for several hours together. Birds sang their evening songs, disappeared, and became silent; fowls went to roost; cattle sought the barnyard; and candles were lighted in the houses. The obscuration began about ten o'clock in the morning and continued till the middle of the next night, but with differences of degree and duration in different places. . . . The true cause of this remarkable phenomenon is not known."—Noah Webster's Unabridged Dictionary (1869), under Explanatory and Pronouncing Vocabulary of Noted Names of Fiction, etc.

R. M. ELDRIDGE, ARTIST

Astronomers revealed that the moon was full the night before, and that it could not have been an eclipse of the sun, because a solar eclipse cannot occur except at new moon. And besides, in the sky that night the full moon itself was seen, having the appearance of a blood-colored disk.

The Meteoric Shower of 1833

Christ foretold another astronomical sign that would be a milepost on the journey of mankind down the road of time. He said, "The stars shall fall from heaven." Matt. 24:29.

"Scientific study of the orbits of shooting stars began after the occurrence of the most brilliant meteoric shower on record, that of November 13, 1833. This spectacle, which excited the greatest interest among all beholders and was looked upon with consternation by the ignorant, was witnessed generally throughout North America, which happened to be the part of the earth then facing the meteoric storm. Hundreds of thousands of shooting stars fell in the course of two or three hours. Some observers compared the number to the flakes of a snowstorm, or to the raindrops in a shower. The more observant spectators noticed that all the meteors appeared to radiate from a fixed point in the constellation of Leo. Tracing their trails backward it was seen that they came together at that point, like the ribs of an opened umbrella, meeting about its central stick."—The Encyclopedia Americana (1938), Vol. 24, p. 743, art. "Shooting Stars."

A World-Wide Advent Message

The last of the definite signs given by our Saviour in His great prophecy is this: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Matt. 24:14. Interest in the prophecies concerning the coming kingdom of Christ naturally was aroused by the astounding spectacle of the falling stars in 1833.

As a result multitudes began to study their Bibles more earnestly. Men and women began to preach everywhere the message of the second advent of Christ in glory. Those who accepted this message came to be known as Adventists, regardless of what their denominational affiliation might have been. Out of this awakening arose a body of believers in the near advent of Christ known as the Seventh-day Adventist Church. Although small at first, this organization has belted the globe and become world wide in its work of proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom to all the world. In our next article we shall discuss its work more fully.

See How God Has Led Us!

As we take a backward glance over the centuries that span from Christ's day to ours, we see how remarkably accurate were His predictions. This gives us new courage and strengthens our faith to hold fast to the end. These things are no longer prophecy; they are historical facts that none can refute.

Along the highway of the centuries we see them, the great, definite, and specific milestones, which are: (1) the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, (2) the great tribulation of the people of God during the papal supremacy from 538 to 1798, (3) the memorable dark day of May 19, 1780, (4) the wonderful meteoric display of shooting stars on the night of November 13, 1833, and (5) the great second advent movement that in the middle of the nineteenth century started proclaiming the message of the soon-coming Saviour to all the world.

The last of these great signs is being fulfilled before our eyes. And to us the Master said, "When ye shall see all these things, know that He is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." Matt. 24:33, 34, margin. We see the last of these great signs being fulfilled in the proclamation of the last message of salvation to the world, and when that is done, "then shall the end come."

With this hope of seeing Jesus come soon, although we know not the day nor the hour of His appearing (Matt. 24:36), let us labor earnestly to finish the task of world-wide evangelism, praying in the meantime: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Matt. 6:10. Surely every true Christian longs to be with his dear Lord and to see the reign of sin on earth come to a speedy end.

Christ Our Righteousness—Part 7

"The Garments of Salvation"

By I. H. EVANS

SALVATION in the kingdom of glory cannot be gained by any man through his own merits. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." Rom. 3:23. The very best of men have not earned nor merited eternal life by works. That is the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

There can be no future merit of salvation from sin by obedience in the coming kingdom; there is no redemption through a purgatory, in which one may become purified and partly pay his own penalty in suffering, thus finding favor with God. The redeemed must be conformable to the law of God in their hearts; they must have supreme love to God, and love their neighbor as themselves, as taught in Holy Scripture.

When Christ comes the second time in the clouds of heaven, there will be a people ready for translation. This is plainly taught in the Scriptures. "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air:

and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. 4:14-18.

We also have the promise: "Behold, I show you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. 15:51-53.

If some who are redeemed do not die, how will they be saved unless they are translated? It has been the hope of many since the ascension of Christ that they might live to see Him return to this earth in power and great glory, and be translated. Death itself does not fit anyone for heaven.

Fitted for Translation

A people fitted for translation will need a special preparation for that event. Probation will have closed before Christ comes. The judgment work will have been finished on both the righteous dead and the living. When they see the Son of man coming with all the holy angels, the righteous living will exclaim, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for Him, we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation." Isa. 25:9.

This culminating event in earth's history will take place suddenly, and by many it will be unexpected. The exhortation to the waiting people of God is: "Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Matt. 24:42-44.

The days before the end are to be thrilling, and to God's people, who are to be translated, they are most solemn and important. Before that day comes, the children of God who are to be translated will not know their own future; for they will have no evidence that they are accepted for translation, save in the Word of God and their faith. They will know by the Word of God that they must be prepared for translation and have on the wedding garment when they stand in the presence of the Lord.

This preparation cannot be made by any individual without divine help, for no human being can fit himself for heaven by his unaided good works. The righteousness of Christ constitutes the fitness of each to qualify himself to meet God. The prophet Isaiah wrote calling this gift of righteousness the "garments of salvation." "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom

Discerning the Signs

BEFORE Christ left this earth He promised to return, and He gave certain signs by which His followers might know when His coming was near at hand. Some in apostolic times thought that Christ would come in their day, and they began to preach such a message. They took the signs that referred to the destruction of Jerusalem as evidence that Christ's return was nigh at hand, for they identified that event with the destruction of the world.

Paul rebuked such preaching and declared that Christ would not come until a certain prophecy should be fulfilled—the one recorded by Daniel concerning the rise and fall of papal Rome. He said, "Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day [the day of Christ] shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." 2 Thess. 2:3.

Longing for Christ's Return

The church was not to look for Christ's return until the signs were revealed and the prophecies were fulfilled. But when they should see these things coming to pass, then they would know that their redemption was drawing nigh.

From time to time through the centuries some believers have preached the imminence of Christ's coming. But they did not wait to see the special signs given by Christ which were to mark off the time of the end. They took some startling event of the time as evidence that the day of the Lord was near.

It is not strange that those who have loved the Lord throughout the Christian dispensation should anxiously look for a sign that might indicate His speedy return. However, we must not overlook the teaching of Christ that only when we "shall see all these things" can we know that His coming "is near, even at the doors." Not one sign, nor two, but all the signs and the fulfillment of all the prophecies must be in evidence before we may know that the end is at hand. Moreover, two particular signs marking off the beginning of the time of the end must be fulfilled before the church was to look up in hope of Christ's soon coming.

Time of the End Pointed Out

These two signs were to be of a startling nature, in order that men might be awakened to the new day that was being ushered in, the day that is called in the Bible "the time of the end." But these signs were not to occur until the tribulation caused by the man of sin had been fulfilled. Christ said:

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Matt. 24:29, 30.

According to these words, all the signs enumerated by Christ as recorded in His prophecy of the end of the world would be fulfilled in a period between the falling of the stars and the time when the powers of heaven would be shaken at His coming. The two signs of the darkening of the sun and the falling of the stars marked the beginning of that period in which men would behold all the signs and see all the prophecies fulfilled.

The tribulation to which Christ refers is the time of tribulation for the church during the 1260 years of papal domination, from A.D. 538 to A.D. 1798, as prophesied in the book of Daniel. It was to this same prophecy of Daniel 7, concerning the rise and dominance of the Papacy, that Paul referred when he stated that the man of sin must first be revealed before Christ would come.

Christ said that this long period of persecution would be shortened for the elect's sake, lest all be destroyed. This was fulfilled in the suppression of the society of Jesuits, the strongest persecuting arm of the Papacy, in 1773, because of religious and political revolutions that were breaking out at that time and threatening the overthrow of the Papacy.

Two Startling Signs

It was in those days which ended in 1798, and after the tribulation which ended in 1773, that the first sign predicted by Christ as marking the ushering in of the time of the end took place. May 19, 1780, is well known in history as "the dark day." It took place at the time Christ declared it would. This strange occurrence caused men to talk of the second coming of Christ and to search the Scripture prophecies as never before.

The next special sign occurred November 13, 1833. On the night of this day an awesome sight was witnessed in many places, as a multitude of shining meteors fell to the earth. There was great consternation. Again people began talking of the end of the world.

Warning the World

God always gives men a chance to repent before His great judgments fall. He does not wish to take them unawares. These were the first signals telling men that God was getting ready to close up human history. The world must first be warned before Christ would come, and these strange signs set men to thinking and to talking. One of those who talked was William Miller, who lived in the New World, that place which was to be a base for proclaiming the soon coming of Christ to the whole world.

The time of the end had come. Now God needed a people who would wholeheartedly go forth to proclaim the soon coming of Christ to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. In 1844 such a people arose and began to enlarge their borders until they now are in every land on earth, proclaiming the good news that Christ's kingdom is soon to be set up.

What is the basis of that message? Is it to be found in some particular sign to which we may point men and say, "When you see that take place, that is the last sign; you must then no longer delay to get ready"? No, we have no sensational event with which to arouse the doubtful and awaken the indifferent. When the spectacular begins to happen, then it will be too late, for it will mark the very coming of the Lord in the clouds of glory.

We now know that we are living in the time of the end. The signs marking the beginning of that time have been fulfilled. What, then, are the signs and prophecies by which the sincere believer may know that Christ's coming "is near, even at the doors"? What are we to look for and take note of that will cause us to know that "it is high time to awake out of sleep," for "the night is far spent, the day is at hand"? This will be considered in future editorials.

F. L.

SEEK GRACE, NOT ECSTASY.—Think not that all is lost, when thy heart is not elevated with that sensible fervor which thou art always coveting. These raptures are allowed thee as sweet foretastes of heavenly bliss, but thou art yet too carnal to be capable of their constant enjoyment. Seek then growth in grace, rather than flights of ecstasy. While thou art in war, expect not the rest of peace; while combating, expect the feelings of combat. Thy principal concern is, to struggle against the emotions of fallen nature, and the suggestions of evil spirits; and if thou doest this with faithful perseverance, thou wilt give true proof of that Christian fortitude which will be distinguished with the crown of victory.—Review and Herald, May 2, 1854.

described as the One through whom God made the worlds. Jesus was the active agent in creation. Jesus was working with God and was the One who did the work as described in Genesis 2, verses 2 and 3. "And on the seventh day God ended His work which He had made; and He rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it He had rested from all His work which God created and made."

Jesus was the one who rested on the seventh day, who blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it. For this reason David could say, "This is the day the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it." This is the reason why John, writing from the lonely Patmos isle, said, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Rev. 1:10. Indeed, the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord. It is Jesus' Sabbath, and has rightly been called the Lord's day. When Jesus was here upon earth He was careful to keep that day which He had made, and to set for us an example. The Bible states that it was His custom to go into the church on the Sabbath day. "And He came to Nazareth, where He had been brought up: and, as His custom was, He went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read." Luke 4:16.

It appears to us now that Satan must have decided that it would be most difficult to tear out all vestiges of Sabbathkeeping from the world's people, so he has attempted to belittle the idea of observing a day. And he has caused the seventh day to become so obscured in the minds of some that they really have little conception of which day Jesus kept when He was here upon this earth, and which day He would have us keep.

Is Sunday the Sabbath?

Is Sunday the day which the Bible describes as the Sabbath of the Lord? Is it the seventh day of the week? A quick glance on any calendar will show you that Sunday is listed as the first day of the week, and that Saturday is listed as the seventh day. And Saturday is indeed the seventh day of the Bible as well as the calendar. How can we be sure of this fact? This question is forever answered in the texts of Scriptures to be found in Luke 23:54-56, and Luke 24:1. It is quite generally agreed that the day of Christ's crucifixion was Friday. The Bible reads, "And that day was the preparation, and the sabbath drew on." Luke 23:54. In accordance with the customs of the times, the mourners "returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the sabbath day according to the commandment." (Verse 56.)

Then we note that upon the first day of the week, these sorrowing individuals came to the sepulcher and discovered that Jesus had already risen. Jesus died on Friday, rested in the tomb on the Sabbath or Saturday, and arose from the dead on Sunday. Which day, therefore, is the

Signs of Christ's Coming in Our Day

By A. E. LICKEY

"What shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Matt. 24:3. Jesus answered this specific question. Therefore, if we understand the meaning of His words, we may know when His coming is near. Please note that His words are to be studied in connection with other Bible prophecies. (Matt. 24:15.) In other words, the prophecies of Christ are basically supported by other prophecies.

I. What Three Signs Were To Be Seen in the Political World?

1. Fear and perplexity. "Upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity. . . . Men's hearts failing them for fear." Luke 21:25, 26.

2. The spirit of war. "For nation shall rise against nation." Matt. 24:7. "And the nations were angry, and Thy wrath is come." Rev. 11:18. "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war." "The day of the Lord is near." Joel 3:9, 14.

3. Great efforts for peace. "And many people shall go and say, . . . Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Isa. 2:3, 4. "For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh." 1 Thess. 5:3.

II. What Perils Were To Be Signs in the Social World?

"This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection." 2 Tim. 3:1-3.

The social sea is boiling, as though a hidden volcano of evil sent up the muck of pride, profanity, lust, filth, and disrespect of law and authority.

III. What Sign Was To Be Seen in the Economic World?

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl. . . . Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." James 5:1-3.

Modern riches have been fabulous. The laborer has been contesting for his share. We yet shall see strange things in this strife before Christ comes back again. God's people will withdraw from the conflict. (James 5:8, 9.)

IV. What Sign Did Daniel Point Out?

"But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Dan. 12:4.

If George Washington should rise from the dead, he would be almost as bewildered by the vastness and intricacies of modern knowledge, and by the maze of traffic and communication, as would Abraham, who lived four thousand years ago.

V. What Six Signs Appear in the Religious World?

1. Scoffers. "Knowing this first, that there shall come . . . scoffers." 2 Peter 3:3.

2. Form of godliness. "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." 2 Tim. 3:5.

3. Lovers of pleasure. "Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." 2 Tim. 3:4.

4. Lack of faith. "Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" Luke 18:8.

5. Lack of love. "The love of many shall wax cold." Matt. 24:12.

6. Gospel to the world. "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Matt. 24:14.

VI. What Signs Would Appear in the Sun, Moon, and Stars?

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven." Matt. 24:29. Dark Day, May 19, 1780. Falling stars, November 13, 1833.

VII. What Other Signs Did Jesus Mention?

1. Famines, pestilences, earthquakes. "And there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places." Matt. 24:7.

These are listed as following world wars. After World War I, China's famine conditions found 15,000,000 starving, 3,000,000 dead. Nansen said that Russia's famine was the "most appalling in the recorded history of man." The influenza epidemic took 18,000,000 lives. China's 1920 earthquake took 200,000 lives, and Japan's in 1923 took 150,000 more. After World War II the number of starving people reached hundreds of millions.

VIII. What Did Christ Admonish Us To Do?

"Watch therefore. . . . Be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye, think not the Son of man cometh." Matt. 24:42-44.

be invited to enter. Had the purpose of God been carried out by His people in giving to the world the message of mercy, Christ would, ere this, have come to the earth, and the saints would have received their welcome into the city of God."—Testimonies, vol. 6, p. 450.

"If those who claimed to have a living experience in the things of God had done their appointed work as the Lord ordained, the whole world would have been warned ere this, and the Lord Jesus would have come in power and great glory."—Review and Herald, Oct. 6, 1896.

The careful reading of these statements must cause us to see that, like Israel of old, we have forgotten our opportunities, been attracted by the things of the world, copied after our neighbors, and lost from our experiences what was needed to complete the task of the church in this last generation.

We could have been in the kingdom now and the troubles of earth ended. God still waits; His promises of power are sure. Now is the appointed time. Will the church continue to countenance sin, and by so doing fail in its task? Let the church arise, throw off the shackles of sin, enjoy the freedom promised by Christ, and finish quickly the task still before us. May there be no more wasted years but a glorious consummation of the work of God for this time.

Who Shall Be Able to Stand?

By Alfred R. Ogden

LORD, who shall abide in Thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in Thy holy hill?" Ps. 15:1. In this verse a question of great importance is set forth. It is one of most vital interest and importance to each individual. No one can evade this vital question, which involves eternal interests. The marginal reading for the word "abide" is "sojourn." In other words, the Lord through the psalmist is asking, Who will find entrance to the everlasting kingdom of our God? The answer to this question is made clear in the verses that follow. The conditions are clear and concise. There can be no evasion of the issue.

"Behold, I will send My messenger, and he shall prepare the way before Me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to His temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, He shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of His coming? and who shall stand when He appeareth? for He is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap." Mal. 3:1, 2. The question here is more specific in its application. "Who may abide the day of His [the Lord's] coming? and who shall stand when He appeareth?"

The prophet, undoubtedly, in this is referring to the second coming of Christ. The study of this third chapter of Malachi makes it clear that this question involves certain distinct tests, as by fire, which test is compared to the refining process of silver and gold.

John, the last of the New Testament writers, in the sixth chapter of the Revelation asks the same question, "Who shall be able to stand?" The setting of this question is most significant. By a study of the context, we see that under the symbols of the seven seals John outlines the history of the church throughout the Christian Era, covering step by step the period between the first and the second coming of Christ. In the twelfth verse the sixth seal is introduced, the seal under which we are now living. "And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood." Rev. 6:12. This seal is definitely introduced by a specific event, a great earthquake. Bible commentators are quite generally agreed that the "great earthquake" of Lisbon, in 1755, is referred to.

Seventh-day Adventists throughout their history have believed and taught that the earthquake of Lisbon was the fulfillment of this prediction of John, the seer of Patmos. The events of the succeeding verses in quick succession bring to light the great signs of the nearness of the end—the Dark Day of May 19, 1780, the moon turning to the dark color of blood, and the falling of the stars, November 13, 1833. Thus, just twenty-five years, a short quarter of a century, after the introduction of this seal the first great sign in the heavens was fulfilled. And thus again only a half century later (to be exact, fifty-three years after the Dark Day) the stars fell from the heavens even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs. (Verse 13.)

Climax of Human History

The fourteenth verse brings us to the climax of human history, the departing of the heavens as a scroll. The signs are the identical signs given us by Jesus in His great discourse in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew. "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Matt. 24:29, 30.

The conditions of the earth in connection with this great event are described in Revelation 6:17. The sixth seal was opened on time, 1755. The sun was darkened and the stars fell just as Jesus foretold and as John saw in vision. Then will come the great and glorious climax, "For the great day of His wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?"

"Largest Amount I Ever Paid"

MANY years ago I attended a gospel service at which all present were invited to make some gift to the Lord in acknowledgment of His goodness. At the time I was not in a position to make a substantial gift, yet I was very anxious to help, for God had been particularly good to me. I resolved to put Him to the test, and give according to the measure of prosperity I had received at His hand.

I was a believer in tithe paying, and had paid my tithe for a year or more. Now I decided to promise a gift to God equal to my tithe for a given period—just over one month. I had no idea as to what the tithe would be, as I was absolutely dependent on God for my success. At the close of the period my tithe amounted to $27.50—by far the largest amount I had ever paid. It was with real joy that I sent $55 to the Lord's treasury, one half being tithe and the other half a thank offering.

The climax of history closes with the great question to each individual, "Who shall be able to stand?" This is the Lord's question to each of us. No one person can answer for another—no husband for wife, no father for son, no mother for daughter, no brother for his sister, or no sister for her brother. It is, indeed, the Lord's personal question, "Who shall be able to stand?" Who shall stand when He appeareth? Who shall dwell in God's holy hill? Many will fall. Some will stand. May you be among those who will stand when the Lord Jesus comes.

The Remnant Church—9

A Letter to a Mistaken Brother

By Ellen G. White

Napier, New Zealand
March 23, 1893

DEAR BROTHER S.:

I address to you a few lines. I am not in harmony with the position that you have taken; for I have been shown by the Lord that just such positions will be taken by those who are in error. Paul has given us warning to this effect. "Now the spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils."

My brother, I learn that you are taking the position that the Seventh-day Adventist Church is Babylon, and that all that would be saved must come out of her. You are not the only man the devil has deceived in this matter. For the last forty years, one man after another has arisen, claiming that the Lord has sent him with the same message; but let me tell you, as I have told them, that this message you are proclaiming is one of the satanic delusions designed to create confusion among the churches.

My brother, you are certainly off the track. The second angel's message was to go to Babylon [the churches] proclaiming her downfall, and calling the people to come out of her. This same message is to be proclaimed the second time. . . .

Adventist Church Not Babylon

My brother, if you are teaching that the Seventh-day Adventist Church is Babylon, you are wrong. God has not given you any such message to bear. Satan will use every mind to which he can attain access, inspiring men to originate false theories, or go off on some wrong tangent, that he may create a false excitement, and thus divert souls from the true issue for this time. I presume that some may be deceived by your message, because they are full of curiosity and desire for some new thing.

It makes me feel sad indeed that you should be deceived in any way by the suggestions of the enemy; for I know the theory that you are advocating is not truth. In advancing the ideas you do, you will do great injury to yourself and to others. Do not seek to misinterpret, and twist, and pervert, the "Testimonies" to substantiate any such message of error. Many have passed over this ground, and have done great harm. As others have started up full of zeal to proclaim this message, again and again, I have been shown that it was not truth.

Other Erroneous Teachings

I understand that you are also proclaiming that we should not pay tithe. My brother, take off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon you are standing is holy ground. The Lord has spoken in regard to paying tithes. He has said, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in Mine house, and prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." But while He pronounces a blessing upon those who bring in their tithes, He pronounces a curse upon those who withhold them. Very recently I have had direct light from the Lord upon this question, that many Seventh-day Adventists were robbing God in tithes and offerings, and it was plainly revealed to me that Malachi has stated the case as it really is. Then how dare any man even think in his heart that a suggestion to withhold tithes and offerings, is from the Lord? Where, my brother, have you stepped out of the path? O get your feet back in the straight path again.

We are near the end, but if you or any other man shall be seduced by the enemy, and led on to set the time for Christ's coming, he will be doing the same evil work which has wrought the ruin of the souls of those who have done it in the past.

If you are wearing the yoke of Christ, if you are lifting His burden, you will see that there is plenty to do in the same lines wherein the servants of God are laboring,—in preaching Christ and Him crucified. But anyone who shall start up to proclaim a message to announce the hour, day, or year of Christ's appearing, has taken up a yoke and is proclaiming a message that the Lord has never given him.

"Tares Among the Wheat"

God has a church upon the earth, who are His chosen people, who keep His commandments. He is leading, not stray offshoots, not one here and one there, but a people. The truth is a sanctifying power, but the church militant is not the church triumphant. There are tares among the wheat. "Wilt thou then that we . . . gather them up?" was the question of the servant; but the master answered, "Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them." The gospel net draws not only good fish, but bad ones as well, and the Lord only knows who are His.

It is our individual duty to walk humbly with God. We are not to seek any strange, new message. We are not to think that the chosen ones of God who are trying to walk in the light, compose Babylon. The fallen denominational churches are Babylon. Babylon has been fostering poisonous doctrines, the wine of error. This wine of error is made up of false doctrines, such as the natural immortality of the soul, the eternal torment of the wicked, the denial of the preexistence of Christ prior to His birth in Bethlehem, and advocating and exalting the first day of the week above God's holy and sanctified day. These and kindred errors are presented to the world by the various churches, and thus the Scriptures are fulfilled that say, "For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." It is a wrath which is created by false doctrines, and when kings and presidents drink this wine of the wrath of her fornication, they are stirred with anger against those who will not come into harmony with the false and satanic heresies which exalt the false sabbath, and lead men to trample underfoot God's memorial.

Fallen angels upon earth form confederations with evil men. In this age antichrist will appear as the true Christ, and then the law of God will be fully made void in the nations of our world. Rebellion against God's holy law will be fully ripe. But the true leader of all this rebellion is Satan clothed as an angel of light. Men will be deceived and will exalt him to the place of God, and deify him. But Omnipotence will interpose, and to the apostate churches that unite in the exaltation of Satan, the sentence will go forth, "Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."—Testimonies to Ministers, pp. 58-62.

Of course, all through this twelve-year period, scores and hundreds of communications bearing warnings, counsels, and encouragement were penned by the messenger of the Lord and were sent into the field in letters and in articles in the journals of the denomination. Though many of these dealt with subjects already presented less comprehensively in the earlier Testimonies, some new phases of counsel were set forth and former counsels emphasized. These are found in such general sections as "Cautions and Counsels" and "Calls to Service." Among the important articles comprising these sections are such as deal with "The Observance of the Sabbath," "A Revival in Health Reform," "Our Attitude Toward the Civil Authorities," "Preparation for the Final Crisis," and "The Relief of Our Schools." The adding of this new volume to the growing series of Testimonies for the Church deeply impressed Seventh-day Adventists with the direct way in which God was continuing to guide and lead His people.

THE TRUSTEES OF THE ELLEN G. WHITE PUBLICATIONS.

Signs of Christ's Coming

By H. B. Taylor

IN REPLY to the disciples' earnest question, "What shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Christ said to them, "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring." Luke 21:25. Christ not only told the disciples where the special signs would appear but also told when these signs would be seen in the heavens.

Matthew 24:29 states, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Additional information as to when these signs would occur is given in Mark 13:24: "In those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light."

The tribulation referred to in these texts is the papal persecution during the Dark Ages from 538 to 1798. This persecution was without question the most dreadful of any that ever came upon the Christian church. (Matt. 24:21.) But Christ said these days would be shortened, for the elect's sake. "Except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Matt. 24:22.

Owing to the Reformation which, by 1773, had made sufficient progress to stay the relentless persecution of God's children, bloodshed practically ceased at that time, or about twenty years before the prophetic period terminated. Then, according to Mark 13:24, "in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened." This darkening of the sun, in other words, was to occur some time after 1773 and before 1798. Exactly in harmony with the Saviour's prophecy reliable history records a dark day within this period of time, on May 19, 1780.

Dark Day of 1780

In Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, in the article "The Dark Day, May 19, 1780," the statement is made:

"In some places, persons could not see to read common print in the open air for several hours together. Birds sang their evening songs, disappeared, and became silent; fowls went to roost; cattle sought the barnyard; and candles were lighted in the houses. The obscuration began about ten o'clock in the morning. . . . The true cause of the remarkable phenomenon is not known."

The prophecy said that the "sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." Mark 13:24. The prophet Joel, in speaking of this same phenomenon, said, "The sun shall be turned into darkness and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come." Joel 2:31. On the night of the Dark Day of May 19, 1780, the moon was full and had the appearance of blood, but gave no light. These facts, which are true to the prophecy of Jesus Christ, are recorded in history. "The darkness of the following evening [May 19, 1780] was probably as gross as has ever been observed since the Almighty fiat gave birth to light."—DR. SAMUEL TENNY, of Exeter, New Hampshire, quoted by Mr. Gage to the Historical Society.

After speaking of the first two signs in the sun and moon Christ spoke of the third sign, the falling of the stars: "The stars shall fall from heaven." Matt. 24:29. This sign was fulfilled in the great meteoric shower of November 13, 1833. Prof. D. Olmsted, of Yale College, wrote as follows: "Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of November 13th, 1833, probably saw the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world."

After Christ had foretold these signs of His second coming which would be seen in the sun, moon, and stars, He added: "Behold the fig tree, and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke 21:29-31.

Signs on Earth

When Christ had spoken of the signs in the heavens that were to mark the nearness of His coming, He quickly followed with signs upon the earth. Let us notice again in Luke 21:25: "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity." How true was Christ's prophecy of our time, when distress and perplexity exist in all the nations throughout the world. It used to be that we had to speak of these things as coming upon the earth, but we now see them so clearly that scientists, statesmen, and educators are talking of the end of the world, the destruction of civilization, world catastrophe, and Armageddon.

"We stand in danger of a new catastrophe that may spell the end of all of us," says the New York Times. "Armageddon and doomsday are now suspended over the heads of our generation," declares Leland Stowe. "If we preserve ourselves, we must acknowledge that a world crisis exists—not next week nor tomorrow, but now, today, for there is very little time remaining," states Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, chancellor, Chicago University.

Was there ever a time like this, when these prophecies were so strikingly fulfilled? Truly, the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, to take the government of the world into His own hands.

"A Great Period of Fear"

In connection with distress and perplexity that shall be extant in the world as His coming draws near, the Saviour speaks of "men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Luke 21:26.

Fortune recently stated that the reaction to the atom bomb was "one of unadulterated fear if not despair." Paul Hutchinson, in his book The New Leviathan, writes: "We are entering, I am convinced, upon a great period of fear. . . . Nothing, I presume, makes us more aware of the perilous nature of these days than the fact that victory in the war brought us so little sense of exultation. . . . The war had brought us no security, and we knew it. . . . There is no security for us. We live in the world of the atom bomb."—Page 225.

The United Nations was to be the means of bringing about peace and security, but it seems to have had the opposite effect. The Allies fought in a spirit of unity, now they live in a state of suspicion and hate.

Herbert Hoover states, "The dominant emotion everywhere in the world is fear. This applies to every part of human activities—finance, industry, farmers, workers, thinkers and government officials. After the last war [World War I], there arose a spirit of hope and confidence. Little has appeared as yet.

In view of these things, our Lord said, "Then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21:27, 28, 36.

How Are You Marking Your Ballot?

By H. G. Thurston

AT THE recent national election here in the United States nearly fifty million citizens voted, and by marked ballots made known their choice. Each was to mark his own ballot; no other person was to do it for him. No one else was to be in the voting booth when he marked his choice.

This plan is one of a worldly government. Now let us compare it with a greater government—God's government in which every man is called upon to make his own choices. Each must choose the course he will follow, must mark his life's ballot. This right to choose, next to life itself, is the dearest and most sacred of all rights, for in it are involved the issues of eternity. The great Inspector of all ballots is God Himself.

He permits two unseen powers to attempt to influence every subject in his choice. The one seeks to influence into the path of self-serving, hatred, Sabbathbreaking, perjury, theft, and every abominable thing which pleases the carnal nature; and the other unseen agency tries to lead into the way of holiness and everlasting life. Every subject of God's government must make the choice and mark his own ballot. A perfect copy of every ballot is kept on file.

Only One Perfect Record

According to the great law Book, no one has ever done proper markings, made a perfect and acceptable record, but the Inspector's Son. (1 Peter 2:22.) But an arrangement has been made by the great and generous Inspector and His Son so that everyone who has made a bad record can exchange it for the Son's perfect record; but in this transaction the imperfect record must be given up—renounced, no matter how precious it may seem to be—before the perfect one can be secured. This plan cost the Son's life in the overpowering victory of Calvary. It brings eternal life to all who have repentance and abandoned marked in the record surrendered. When the Son's record is accepted, the name of the receiver is marked upon it as his own.

Now is the day of inspection of life's ballots. (Acts 3:19.) It will soon close. When it closes, your imperfect ballot will be destroyed, blotted out, to appear no more against you. Your mistakes recorded then will be forgotten (Jer. 31:34), will be removed "as far as the east is from the west" (Ps. 103:12), and will "not be found" (Jer. 50:20). Why all this? The Inspector "delighteth in mercy." Micah 7:18. His decision is irrevocable.

But if not given up, the imperfect marking of your life will remain against you to plague and to destroy you.

By day and night you are making your choice—marking your ballots. Is yours a wise choice? Brother, what are you marking on your life's ballot?

ESPECIALLY FOR YOUTH

Are You Dead or Alive?

By Arthur L. Bietz

THERE is much more to living than mere physical life. Many who are alive physically are dead mentally. They have not had a new stimulating thought for many years. They move back and forth through life like a door swinging on its hinges. About all they can do is to emit a rusty squeak and a critical squeal. To them life has lost its zest and zeal. There is no color or purpose which carries them buoyantly through the day's tasks.

The death of which we are speaking has nothing to do with chronological age. Some men at eighty may be more alive than others at twenty. Life relates to a man's spirit much more than to his body.

Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." John 10:10. The life Jesus is speaking of here is not animal life. He is speaking of something infinitely higher and more meaningful. It is the difference between living and existing. Many human beings exist; others live. A Scriptural passage speaks thus: "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Eph. 5:14.

Living goes much deeper than good looks or physical vigor. Living goes far beyond temporary, fleeting pleasure. "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." 1 Tim. 5:6. This does not mean that there is no place for recreation and enjoyment in the Christian scheme of things. It simply means that a person ought to have a goal in life which goes beyond running after things that give temporary relaxation.

Pursuing Worthy Goals

True pleasure is a by-product of pursuing worthy goals. The person who makes pleasure the goal of life is likely to be bored. Take a look at the person who is constantly seeking to be amused. He is miserable.

Life was meant for achievement, growth, and worthy attainment. Set out to accomplish a worthy goal; give yourself unreservedly to it; and you will find happiness and pleasure as a by-product. The one who goes out merely in search of pleasure is likely to end up like the dog who goes chasing after his tail; he is never quite able to catch up with it. If he would forget his search for pleasure and be about some constructive business, he would be much happier.

Some young people say, "I mean to be a Christian someday, but I want to live first." What utter deception this statement portrays. To be unaware of spiritual values is to be dead. To live without Jesus as your best Friend is to miss life's highest intended pleasure. The wholesome, congenial Christian is truly alive.

Some think they are living when they drink and smoke. One is not really living when he has to bolster himself up by these bad habits. How can a man live when he stupefies his brain so he does not know whether he is living or not.

"The just shall live by his faith." Faith in God is the only way to real living. Doubt and unbelief are symptoms of death. Why not start living?

than to the world, is this imminent advent. Is Israel ready? Shall she repeat the history of that now forsaken Israel who failed to receive her Messiah? Shall weaknesses of the flesh, the vain pleasures of the world, the search for forbidden knowledge, the greed for money and power, the ambitions of unsanctified hearts, rise up against the times of God? Or shall this modern Israel, this Laodicean church, repent of her lukewarmness, receive the unadulterated gold of God's truth, discard the filthy rags of her own good deeds and put on the white raiment of Christ's righteousness, open her eyes to the saving faith of God, and be accounted ready for the King?

The answer lies not alone with the leadership of the church, great, though, is its responsibility. It lies with you and me, with every man, woman, and child of this last-day church. Let every one take heed whom he is following. Christ is our supreme Leader, and we can safely follow only men who follow Him.

Christ is coming! He is coming in glory! And but a little while divides that blessed day from ours. A near tomorrow!

But today He comes in grace. Who will receive Him? They who tomorrow will joyfully greet Him in the fullness of His glory. "Behold," He says, "I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Revelation 3:20.

The fullness of the time is come. "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him!" Matt. 25:6.

(Reading, Monday, November 13, 1950)

"At the Doors"

By W. L. EMMERSON

EVER since sin entered the world, marring the fair face of creation with sorrow, suffering, and death, the faithful remnant have longed for the day when the controversy would be over and the victory won. Ever recurring in their minds and trembling upon their lips has been the question, "How long, O Lord?"

The question is indeed a natural one. If a dearly loved friend, whom you had not seen for a long time, wrote saying he was coming to see you, and if in the course of his letter he promised that he would help you out of all your difficulties, you would naturally look forward eagerly to his arrival. You would want to know exactly when to expect him, so that you might give him the welcome that was in your heart.

The return of Jesus means more to the children of God than the coming of any earthly friend, for He will solve, not merely every personal problem, but every world problem as well. Surely, then, it is only natural that they and we should continually ask, "How long?"

Had God chosen so to do, He could have answered this ever present question by stating precisely the "day" and even the "hour" of His Son's return, but He has not done so for two reasons. If the faithful Israelites or the early church had been told just how long the period of waiting would be before Jesus could come back, they might have become discouraged by its remoteness. Moreover, many down the ages would have procrastinated in their personal preparation by reason of the fact that the day was so far off. Jesus declared that some, in any case, would say, "My Lord delayeth his coming," and would "eat and drink with the drunken." Matt. 24:48, 49.

So, in His wisdom, instead of specifying just when His Son would come back, God set up prophetic waymarks along the high-road of time whereby succeeding generations might recognize His overruling hand in the kingdoms of men and see the day of the Lord drawing ever nearer.

Panoramas of Time

We are familiar with the great panoramic prophecies that God gave to Daniel and to John the revelator, and we know that we have passed almost all the waymarks that God set up for the guidance of His people.

We know that we are down in the feet and toes of the great image that Nebuchadnezzar was shown (Daniel 2) and in the time of the fourth of the world powers of Daniel seven.

We know that a century and a half ago the church emerged from the long period of "tribulation" foretold in the visions of both Daniel and John as well as by Jesus (Matt. 24:21), and that we have entered the final epoch of the "time of the end," which reaches from the close of the great tribulation to the end of time. (Dan. 8:17.)

We know more than that, for in His prophetic Word, God has described the course of the "time of the end" with such a wealth of detail that if we have eyes to see and ears to hear and hearts to understand, it is impossible to resist the conclusion that the returning King is today not merely on the way but "near, even at the doors." Matt. 24:33.

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days," declared Jesus, "shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven." Verse 29.

Have those waymarks been passed? Yes indeed; the darkening of the sun and moon were fulfilled in the Dark Day and subsequent night of May 19, 1780, and the stars fell exactly as foretold in the spectacular star shower of November 13, 1833.

Continuing His delineation of the course of the "time of the end," Jesus went on to say, "And there shall be . . . upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity," deepening and widening until the hearts of men everywhere would be "failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Luke 21:25, 26. And this despite the declaration by Daniel that during the same period many would run to and fro, and knowledge would be increased. (Dan. 12:4.)

That these two aspects of the latter days have been both spectacularly and tragically fulfilled during the past century or so we know well enough. What perhaps has not sufficiently burned itself into our consciousness is the significance of the crescendo of progress and catastrophe in our time.

Limits of Knowledge and Power Almost Reached

As the years of the nineteenth century sped on, men certainly did begin to run to and fro with increasing rapidity. Steamships displaced the old sailing vessels upon the seas, and the railway and the automobile revolutionized travel on land, until, by the end of the century, Jules Verne was able, without any suggestion of fantasy, to write his famous story Round the World in Eighty Days.

But here is the fact that appeals to me as of the deepest significance: The capacity of man to run to and fro was speeded up some fourfold between 1800 and 1900, but in the fifty subsequent years of the twentieth century, communications have been speeded up by the development of the airplane no less than twentyfold, so that a traveler today can go round the world by commercial airways in little more than four days. And even this rapidity of motion will soon be eclipsed, for new methods of propulsion have already made possible speeds faster than that of sound, and bid fair soon to bring man to the very limit of human endurance.

Think, too, of the increase of knowledge that Daniel also foreshadowed in "the time of the end." Knowledge has vastly increased in an infinite number of directions during the past 150 years, but the point most deeply to be pondered is the crescendo of the expansion of knowledge in recent decades.

D. R. Davies in his book Theology and the Atomic Age truly declares: "If the nineteenth century is 'the wonderful century,' then the twentieth century can only be thought of as 'the incredible century.'"

—Page 38.

So spectacular, in fact, has been the penetration of the scientists into the secrets of the infinitely small and the infinitely large, in the last decade or so, that man has been carried almost to the limits of his capacity to comprehend the universe.

Says Lincoln Barnett in his recent book The Universe and Dr. Einstein, after discussing the most recent discoveries in the heart of the atom and on the farthest horizons of space: "For all the promise of future revelation it is possible that certain terminal boundaries have already been reached in man's struggle to understand the manifold of nature in which he finds himself. . . . There appears to be nowhere to progress."—Page 100.

Surely the conclusion cannot be resisted that this time to which we have come, when men's hands are reaching out to grasp ultimate power and uncover the last secrets of knowledge, is the time when God must step in to wrest from them that knowledge and power of which they have shown themselves so utterly undeserving.

On the Edge of the Abyss

That the times indeed demand the speedy intervention of God is even more clearly underlined when we look at the other side of the prophetic forecast and note the crescendo of catastrophe that has come upon the world in our day and generation.

In his book The Two Humanities, D. R. Davies points out that in the past 150 years major conflicts have become increasingly frequent and the intervals between them have become progressively shorter and shorter.

"Between the end of the Napoleonic Wars and the Franco-Prussian War," he says, "was a period of fifty-five years. From the Franco-Prussian War to the Great War of 1914-18 was a period of forty-three years; and from the end of the Great War to this Greater War, the interval has been only twenty-one years."—Page 34.

"Note," he significantly adds, "the sinister descent: fifty-five years, forty-three, and twenty-one. And each succeeding war more intense and destructive than the last—more destructive, not only of life and property, but of truth, liberty, and supreme values."

And today, with the second world war hardly over, men are talking not so much of the possibility of a third universal conflict as of the imminence of its outbreak.

Jesus declared that the nations would at last be so completely caught in the spiral of mounting destruction that there would be "no way out" of universal catastrophe, for that is what the expression "with perplexity," in Luke 21:25, literally means. Within the past few years we have certainly come to that time.

As recently as the period between the first and second world wars the leaders of the nations were still confident that the problem of world peace would be solved and that civilization was on the way to Utopia. Then came the war, and hope diminished. But when the first atom bomb fell out of the blue upon ill-fated Hiroshima, mankind's morale collapsed with startling suddenness.

Since then the scientists have become possessed of secrets of the atom that have made the bombs of Hiroshima and Nagasaki seem like children's playthings. And today the frightened leaders of the nations, conscious that unless some control of these horrific forces is quickly found, there is literally "no way out," stand paralyzed and helpless in the face of inevitable catastrophe.

That men should have come on the one hand almost to the limits of knowledge and power and on the other to the impasse of imminent self-destruction, can mean only one thing. The time of the end is far spent. The end of time is at hand. And Jesus is "at the doors."

There is not time to survey the many other signs of the end-time to which attention might be drawn, such as the resurgence of papal power, the emergence of the lamblike beast of the New World from obscurity to paramount power, the sharpening outlines of the image to the beast in the erstwhile Protestant churches of Christendom, the awakening of the East, and the moving of the spotlight of world concern to the ancient Bible lands of the Middle East. All that can be stressed here in connection with each of these features of the prophetic picture is the sudden and tremendous increase in the tempo of these developments in our day—and their irresistible implication.

Final Movements Will Be Rapid Ones

Years ago we were told by the messenger of the Lord that "the final movements will be rapid ones" (Testimonies, vol. 9, p. 11), and as we look around the world today we cannot but sense the fact that we have entered the time of those rapid final movements.

Recognizing that events upon the earth are thus hastening to their climax, we are forced to the awe-inspiring conclusion that preparations in heaven must as swiftly be moving forward toward the day when the Judge of all the earth will break into history for the finishing of His agelong purposes. Nearer even than the climactic day of Christ's return is the time when the heavenly assize will have completed its work and the decision concerning every human soul will go forth: "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still." Rev. 22:11.

And so the solemnizing challenge comes to us in the midst of this Week of Prayer season, that we must hurry too if we are to be ready to meet the Lord in peace when He comes.

This is the note on which Peter concludes the striking prophecy recorded in the third chapter of his second epistle.

Having described the coming of the "day of the Lord . . . in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat," when "the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up" (2 Peter 3:10) he urges:

"Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless." Verse 14.

The expression Peter uses here, "Be diligent," involves more than earnestness in preparation for the day of the Lord. It emphasizes also the sense of urgency. Elsewhere it is actually translated "make haste." Thus in Luke 2:16 the same root word in the story of the coming of the shepherds to the manger of Bethlehem is rendered: "And they came with haste, and found . . . the babe." Elsewhere we are told that Zaccheus "made haste, and came down," and received Jesus joyfully into his house. (Luke 19:5, 6.)

So here Peter exhorts those who see events speeding on to the great consummation to "make haste," that they may be ready for the fateful day.

How then are we to get ready? In His message to the last church upon earth, through the revelator, Jesus says of the time just before His visible return: "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Rev. 3:20.

Thus, before Jesus comes in glory and power to the world He comes in grace to the heart door of every individual soul. By opening the door of our hearts here and now as He stands seeking admission, we may make our peace with Him and begin that wonderful fellowship that will find its consummation in the unending glories of the eternal kingdom.

If you listen, you can hear Him knocking now, for says the Lord's messenger: "Every warning, reproof, and entreaty in the word of God or through His messengers is a knock at the door of the heart. It is the voice of Jesus asking for entrance."—The Desire of Ages, p. 490.

Open the Door

In several striking messages the messenger of the Lord reveals the response of the church of the last days to this appeal of the waiting Christ. Some she says will be heedless of the knocking of the gracious Saviour and will keep the door of their heart fast shut against Him. Such she warns: "With every knock unheeded, the disposition to open becomes weaker. The impressions of the Holy Spirit, if disregarded to-day, will not be as strong to-morrow. The heart becomes less impressi-ble, and lapses into a perilous unconsciousness of the shortness of life, and of the great eternity beyond."—Ibid.

Others, she says, "opened the door slightly, and permitted a little light from his presence to enter, but did not welcome the heavenly Visitor. There was not room for Jesus. The place which should have been reserved for him was occupied with other things."—Testimonies, vol. 2, p. 216.

Of still others she says: "I saw that many have so much rubbish piled up at the door of their heart that they cannot get the door open. Some have difficulties between themselves and their brethren to remove. Others have evil tempers, selfish covetousness, to remove before they can open the door. Others have rolled the world before the door of their heart, which bars the door. All this rubbish must be taken away, and then they can open the door and welcome the Saviour in."—Ibid., vol. 1, p. 143.

How is it, brother, sister, with you? Is your heart's door closed against the waiting Saviour? Is it open only just a little by reason of the rubbish that still must be cleared away before there is room for Him within? Should not all the rubbish be cleared away?

If your condition is so described, will you not ponder the wonderful condescension of Jesus and open wide the door for Him now while there is yet time?

"The mansions of glory are his," we are told, "and the joy of that heavenly abode; yet he humbles himself to seek an entrance at the door of your heart, that he may bless you with his light, and make you to rejoice in his glory."—Ibid., vol. 2, p. 224.

Such love demands a response, and the times emphasize its urgency, for while He is now knocking in mercy and in love, soon He will be knocking as an officer of divine law, to hail the heedless and unready to inexorable judgment.

So pleads one of the Lord's angel messengers: "Get ready, get ready, get ready" for there is not much time! (Early Writings, p. 64.)

(Reading, Tuesday, November 14, 1950)

"What Manner of Persons Ought Ye to Be?"

By FRANCIS M. WILCOX

THE apostle Peter wrote of the closing days of earth's history, when the church of Christ would be living in expectancy of His soon coming. Of the church in that waiting period, the apostle inquires, "What manner of persons ought ye to be?" We who read this question today are the ones addressed. We are living in the judgment hour. We know not how soon our cases may come up for review in the heavenly tribunal. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Signs in the heavens above, in the earth beneath, in the social, the industrial, the political, the religious worlds, as well as fulfilling lines of Bible prophecy, demonstrate that we have not followed cunningly devised fables, but a hope and faith well grounded upon the infallible Word of divine revelation.

Inspiring but momentous is the consideration that the great controversy between truth and error, which began in heaven above by the unjust charges of Satan against God and the divine government, is to reach its great and final climax in this our day. And every child of God will be a participant in the controversy. Every human intelligence must take his stand with God and truth, or stand marshaled under the banner of Satan. There can be no neutrals. All who are not positively and actively standing for right and truth will be classed on the side of wrong and evil.

Is it not, therefore, most fitting that we should consider "what manner of persons" we must be in this fateful hour? Our very souls are at stake. How dare we fail to meet the issue earnestly, solemnly, prayerfully, seeking the enlightenment and leading of the Holy Spirit, reconsecrating ourselves to God without one single reservation. Only as we do this can we hope to prove triumphant.

"Those who come up on every point, and stand every test, and overcome, be the price what it may, have heeded the counsel of the True Witness, and they will receive the latter rain, and thus be fitted for translation."—Testimonies, vol. 1, pp. 187, 188.

Does the apostle Peter indicate what is required of us by the divine standard of character? He does: "What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God? . . . Be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless." 2 Peter 3:11-14.

This means high and holy attainment of character. As never before we must realize in this late hour that we cannot continue to cherish sin and find a home with the pure and holy. There come to us these faithful admonitions from the messenger of the Lord:

"Now is the time to prepare. The seal of God will never be placed upon the forehead of an impure man or woman. It will never be placed upon the forehead of the ambitious, world-loving man or woman. It will never be placed upon the forehead of men or women of false tongues or deceitful hearts. All who receive the seal must be without spot before God—candidates for heaven."—Ibid., vol. 5, p. 216.

In view of this high and holy standard to which we must attain, shall we not heed this admonition from the apostle Paul:

"Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. But exhort one another daily, while it is called To day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." Heb. 3:12-14.

How to Get Rid of Sin

If in searching our hearts we find sin there, how shall we put it away?

Why do we raise a question like this to the members of the church? Are there some among them who do not know the steps they must take in truly becoming the children of God? I know from letters that have come to me and from personal interviews that there are those among us who are still wavering and uncertain as to their relationship to God. And so far as that is concerned, it will prove helpful to all of us on an occasion like this to review our Christian experience.

Recognizing our sins, we must confess them to God, and also to our fellowmen wherein we have sinned against them. Our confession should be as broad as the knowledge of sin. Have we disgraced the church by some publicly known evil? Our confession should be made to the church. Have we been unkind, impatient in our home? We should confess to our loved ones. Have we had trouble with a brother and do we feel that he was more greatly in the wrong?

"If envy, malice, bitterness, evil surmising, have existed, confess these sins, not in a general way, but go to your brethren and sisters personally. Be definite. If you have committed one wrong and they twenty, confess that one as though you were the chief offender."—MRS. E. G. WHITE in Review and Herald, Dec. 16, 1884.

True sorrow for sin leads not only to confession but to restitution. It is not enough to say to God "We are sorry we robbed you in tithes and offerings," but we must restore what we have taken. If we have cheated our neighbor, we must also make restitution to him.

And in this work of putting away sin we must act promptly. It is too late to delay. "I was shown God's people waiting for some change to take place,—a compelling power to take hold of them. But they will be disappointed, for they are wrong. They must act; they must take hold of the work themselves, and earnestly cry to God for a true knowledge of themselves." "It should be a subject of thought,

Multiplying Signs of Christ's Return

By Leonard C. Lee

As already observed, Satan "was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him." At the present time many declare that there is no personal devil, that there are no evil angels. This teaching reminds one of the strategy employed by the once-noted bandit chieftain of Central China, known as White Wolf. He would terrorize large sections of country, secure much valued booty, then withdraw to a mountain fastness to enjoy the fruits of his plunder. At length he would cause the report to be circulated that "White Wolf is dead." The townspeople and country folks would naturally relax their vigilance, leave their stores and crops unguarded; and then in an unsuspected moment he would swoop down again in a successful and devastating raid.

Even so with the legions of darkness. They would have the world believe that Satan and his unseen allies are but figments of a wild imagination and wholly nonexistent. But the Word of truth declares them to be very real and formidable foes, and warns us against the malevolent influence of "an organized and all-pervading demonism."

The Old Testament speaks of evil spirits and lying spirits (1 Sam. 16:14; 1 Kings 22:22); and in the New Testament are such expressions as "the devil and his angels" (Matt. 25:41), "the spirits of devils, working miracles" (Rev. 16:14), "possessed with devils" (Matt. 4:24), "seducing spirits" (1 Tim. 4:1), and "unclean spirits" (Matt. 5:13), whose number is declared to be "Legion" (verse 9).

Against these menacing foes the apostle bids us ever be on our guard: "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness [“wicked spirits,” margin] in high places [“heavenly places,” margin]." Eph. 6:12.

Peter also emphasizes the necessity of continual alertness, saying to the flock of Christ, "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." 1 Peter 5:8.

In his own strength man is no match for the evil forces arrayed against him. But when Christ died on Calvary and rose again the third day as a victor over death, Satan and his hosts knew that their kingdom was doomed, that their destiny was sealed. Today they fight with the frenzy and desperation of certain defeat; yet, trusting all to our powerful Friend and Redeemer, we may be "more than conquerors through him that loved us." Rom. 8:37.

Integrity, firmness, and perseverance are qualities which all should seek earnestly to cultivate; for they clothe the possessor with a power which is irresistible. —Testimonies, vol. 4, p. 656.

Jesus said, "I will come again." For nineteen hundred years His followers have been looking for that promise to be fulfilled. The disciples thought His coming would be the end of the world. They said to Him, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Matt. 24:3. They expected it to be but a short time in the future. The Thessalonians also looked for it in their day, and Paul had to tell them that the Second Advent would not take place until a great apostasy had come.

"Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed." 2 Thess. 2:1-3.

In Paul's day people were being deceived by those who claimed that Christ was already here or was coming immediately. Today it is easier to think Jesus' coming is a long way off. Too many are like the wicked servant who said, "My lord delayeth his coming."

Jesus gave some signs which tell us when His coming is near:

"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Luke 21:25-27.

The Dark Day occurred 170 years ago. The stars fell in a great meteoric shower more than one hundred years ago. These signs caused men to feel that Christ's coming was near. They were spectacular and awe-inspiring.

As It Was in Noah's Day

Jesus compared His coming to Noah's day:

"And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all." Luke 17:26, 27.

In the days of Noah there were plenty of signs for those who believed God. The building of an ark was an arduous task. Only those who believed God would have forsaken the pleasures of the world to labor for 120 years at such a task. Then there were supernatural signs—the animals came into the ark two by two and seven by seven; the birds came as if led by an unseen guide.

But the people had made up their minds to believe or disbelieve, and nothing could change them. The signs and wonders had served to divide the righteous from the wicked. The main difference between the saved and the lost in Noah's day was belief in God. Those who believed God went into the ark and were saved. Those who did not believe stayed out, and were lost.

The reason people did not believe was that they did not want to believe. It would have meant giving up some worldly pleasure or enjoyment. It would have meant becoming unpopular. The same signs were before all, but each interpreted the signs according to the spirit that was in him, the spirit of heavenly love or the spirit of selfishness. No wonder Jesus classes this kind of disbelief as the greatest sin of all. When He promised to send the Holy Spirit He said, "And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." John 16:8.

Conditions and Events

The signs of Christ's second coming all can see. But they will be interpreted according to the spirit of the individual. In order that men might believe Him, He has foretold the conditions and events that would herald His second coming. Jesus said, "Behold, I have told you before." Matt. 24:25. He has outlined the great prophetic events: the fall of Jerusalem, the persecution, the Dark Ages, and great tribulation. Then He told of the Dark Day of 1780 and the falling of the stars in 1833. This was to be followed by distress of nations, famines, earthquakes, tidal waves, and perplexity among men.

These predictions of Jesus were written nineteen hundred years ago in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke. But more than this, the New Testament is filled with predictions about Christ's coming and the signs of its nearness. A noted author, a skeptic, wrote: "All I desire to point out here is that the New Testament offers precise and elaborate specifications of the events preceding the inevitable end of the world, and that a fair reading of them must lead any rational man to conclude that these events are now upon us."—H. L. MENCKEN in the American Mercury, April, 1932.

Let us note some of these signs. "Men's hearts failing them for fear." Luke 21:26. Today the world is full of fear. Fear of war is leading the nations to spend millions on arms. Men fear poverty, loss of jobs, capitalism, Communism, and even fear itself. Heart disease is a direct result of the high tension under which men live because of fear.

Paul lists the social sins that are a sign of Christ's coming.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." 2 Tim. 3:1-5.

Notice that Paul is referring to religious people who have a form of godliness. It is their love of pleasure that keeps them from looking for Jesus to come. Peter gives us further word on this:

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." 2 Peter 3:3, 4.

James tells us about the financial conditions of the world in the last days:

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." James 5:1-3.

There have always been riches and poverty, but never on such a grandiose scale. We talk glibly about a billion dollars. How much is a billion? There have not been a billion minutes since Paul was beheaded by Nero. One auto builder who is supposed to have accumulated a billion dollars in forty years must have made an average of more than sixty-eight thousand dollars a day.

James accuses the rich of getting rich by depriving the laborers of their just share of the profits. (Verse 4.) The terrible struggles being waged today are a result of this conflict. It is a sign that Christ's coming is very near. "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. . . . Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Verses 7, 8.

Increase of Knowledge

God has not limited His signs to any one class or group. All must see and be without excuse. Back in the days of Daniel the prophet God said, "But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Dan. 12:4.

For more than five and a half millenniums men lived and died with very little advancement in human knowledge. But in the last 150 years mankind has jumped from the horse and buggy to the automobile and railroad car, the jet plane and the rocket. Radio, television, and atom bombs were always a possibility, but God kept them hidden until the last day, to be a sign of Christ's soon return.

Jesus said, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Luke 21:28.

No man knows the day or the hour when probation closes. In Noah's day those who were saved were in the ark before the Flood came. Decisions were made in the calm workaday world. Just so, it will be too late to make decisions when we see Christ coming. We read in the parable of the ten virgins, "And they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut." Matt. 25:10.

"Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." Matt. 24:42.

Science Confirms Our Faith

BY J. DEWITT FOX, M.D.

The Sour Side of Sugar

Long ago Mrs. E. G. White in her writings on diet discouraged the excessive use of sugar, highly refined foods, and rich desserts. For a time we had to accept her statements on diet by faith, but now modern nutritionists give us valid reasons for cutting down on sweets.

Now we know that not only does sugar make you fat and put holes in your teeth, but it also accounts for many of the deficiency diseases from which three out of every four Americans suffer.

Because sugar displaces essential foods in your diet, your chances of developing a vitamin deficiency are much greater when you eat too many sweets and desserts.

And now famed research men are speaking out against America's excessive use of sugar. Says Dr. Clive M. McKay, of Cornell University, one of the country's top nutritionists, "We'd all be better off if sugar had never been discovered as a human food."

The staggering amount of sugar we consume in this country is appalling. This year Americans will eat eight million tons of sugar and spend a fabulous $5,500,000,000 to tickle their taste buds. Most of the money will be spent for white sugar, soft drinks, bakery goods, and candies.

And if you are an "average American," this year you are likely to eat one hundred pounds of sugar yourself. Half of this will be your own kitchen sugar, and the rest will come from soda bottles, bakeshops, and candy counters. This will be ten times the amount grandfather ate in his day.

The case against sugar, the Department of Agriculture points out, is that when we eat sugar at the rate of one hundred pounds per capita, we eat a good deal less of body-building foods such as proteins, fats, and carbohydrates, which contain minerals such as calcium and iron and vitamins A, B, and C. The more sugar you eat beyond a small minimum, the less chance you have of getting these essential food factors, say nutritionists. Actually only 10 per cent of your total daily calories should consist of sugar. One of the commonest vitamin deficiencies found by doctors today is that of vitamin B complex. One reason for this is that with the high sugar intake, the body needs a high vitamin B complex factor to burn the sugar. But since the refined foods do not contain vitamin B complex, the body borrows from its reserve. Ultimately these reserves are burned up, and a gross deficiency results. This gives the patient the feeling of lassitude, and a complete loss of pep.

Now, take sugar out of the diet, add the natural foods that contain B complex, and the patient miraculously improves. Do as top nutritionists say—leave sugar out of your diet except for the 10 per cent minimum that we need in cooking or flavoring foods.

Proof that sugar causes cavities is presented by Dr. L. S. Fosdick, of Northwestern University, who observed 809 American college students for two years. Leaving the remaining part of the diet unchanged, he merely removed sugar from their menus. In this group he found the number of cavities markedly reduced.

Another dental research scientist, Dr. Hermann Becks, at the University of California, persuaded 1,500 of his patients to eliminate one high-sugar food for just one year. In 81 per cent of the group no new cavities developed.

Although highly refined and concentrated sugars are very injurious to the body, because the vitamins and minerals have been removed in the refining process, natural sugars are good. When God made man's food He placed sugar within the foods in the plant cells, to make the foods palatable and delicious to the taste. But God knew best. He also placed within these cells certain vitamins, minerals, and body-building elements, to be eaten along with the sugar.

So if you like delicious sweet foods, reach for a natural sweet, which contains iron, calcium, and vitamins in abundance. Try some dates, dried figs, rich golden apricots (abounding in vitamin A and iron), and peaches, for in season all fresh fruits have natural sugars plus the other essential food elements the body needs.

Signs in the Heavens

By R. H. NIGHTINGALE

One day a minister of another denomination said to me: "You Adventists talk a great deal about prophecy, the end of the world, and the second coming of Jesus Christ, but I do not preach prophecy. It is too vague and indefinite. We cannot be sure about those prophetic things. I stick to the Gospels and the teachings and sayings of Jesus Christ, and let prophecy alone."

My answer was to the effect that it is impossible for anyone to preach the New Testament and the teachings of Jesus Christ without teaching prophecy. Jesus Himself gave us the great prophetic timetable concerning the end of the world, a prophecy which is so important that three out of the four Gospels record it. (Matthew 24, Mark 13, and Luke 21.)

The promise of Jesus was, "I will come again." John 14:3. In answer to the disciples' question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" Jesus said, "There shall be signs" (Matt. 24:3; Luke 21:25). Not only do we have great prophetic guideposts from apostles and prophets of old, but we have the word of Christ Himself. Not only does He promise to come back in the clouds of heaven the second time, "with power and great glory," to bring an end to this present world order, but He gives us definite signs whereby we can know that His coming is near.

Many do not believe in these prophetic signs. To this class belonged the Pharisees of Jesus' day, who did not believe in the signs of Christ's Advent as foretold in Old Testament predictions:

"He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red. And in the morning, It will be foul weather to day: for the sky is red and lowring. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" Matt. 16:2, 3.

Unbelievers in Every Age

So today some do not discern the "signs of the times" in regard to the end. In fact, there are two extreme views taken on this subject. Every once in a while someone claims to be able to tell the year, the month, and even the day of Christ's coming. However, all these prognosticators are bound to be disappointed, for our Saviour said, "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not even the angels of heaven, but my Father only." Matt. 24:36.

Others take the position that we cannot know anything about the time of His coming. Some think it may be a thousand years or it may be tonight. But Jesus said that certain things would take place whereby we might know, not guess when the end is near, "even at the doors."

The Word of God teaches emphatically that certain things would take place in the sky and on earth, in the political, social, economic, and spiritual world, which would be undeniable evidence that the end of the world was near.

Setting of Christ's Prophecy

Jesus had been making some startling prophecies concerning the destruction of Jerusalem. He had said:

"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." Matt. 23:37, 38.

The disciples understood that He was talking about the Temple and "came to him for to shew him the buildings of the temple. And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." Matt. 24:1, 2.

This so impressed the disciples that "as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Verse 3.

Jesus foretold accurately many things concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, but we are concerned with the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" We turn to the Gospel of Luke for the answer:

"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Luke 21:25-28.

One thing is sure and certain: if the Scriptures are true, the end will come. Those who believe in the resurrection, a future judgment, and the parable of the wheat and tares must believe in the end of the world, for in the parable of the wheat and tares Jesus speaks of a time coming that He called "the end of the world." (Matt. 13:39.)

The disciples asked how it could be known when these things would take place, and Jesus said, "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring." Luke 21:25.

What is a sign? You start on a journey to a certain city, you may drive for many miles without seeing any advertising, but as you near the city the signs increase. The hotel man, the repairman, the druggist, the grocer—all have their signs. These are to be seen and read to let people know what is just ahead. So God has given definite signs as we approach the end of the world that we might know "that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Verse 31.

Advertising the End of the World

A sign is placed where it will get the most attention, where it will be observed and read. So Christ, in advertising the end of the world, says, "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars." Verse 25. Notice when He said the first of these heavenly signs would appear. After foretelling the great time of tribulation, which we know as the Dark Ages, Jesus said, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened." Matt. 24:29. The time for this Dark Day to occur is made clear by the prophecy. It was to come "immediately after the tribulation of those days." However, those days were so awful that they were "shortened." (Verse 22.) The period of persecution mentioned was the 1260 years of papal supremacy, from A.D. 538 to A.D. 1798.

The Most Amazing Display of Falling Stars Ever Witnessed Took Place on November 13, 1833—Fulfilling the Prophecy of Jesus in Luke 21:25

About 1776 religious tolerance was granted in Europe, and papal persecutions came to a close. However, the time period did not end till 1798. The Gospel of Mark identifies this Dark Day thus: "But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened." Mark 13:24. Accordingly, we are to look for the darkening of the sun within a short period of years, "in those days" right after that tribulation, or between 1776 and 1798.

Historical References to Dark Day

This prophecy had a most remarkable fulfillment on May 19, 1780. That day is known as the Dark Day. There are many accounts of eyewitnesses. Reliable histories also show that this prophecy was fulfilled.

"The 19th of May, 1780, was unprecedented in New England for its great darkness. . . . The darkness extended over several thousand square miles, though differing much in intensity in different places. Nowhere, perhaps, was it greater than in this vicinity. The day was appropriately called and is still known as The Dark Day."—JOSEPH DORR, History of the Town of Hampton, New Hampshire, vol. 1, p. 217.

"The dark day of New England, so familiar to old and young, came May 19, 1780. . . . Near eleven o'clock, it began to grow dark, as if night were coming. Men ceased their work; the lowing cattle came to the barns, the bleating sheep huddled by the fences, the wild birds screamed and flew to their nests, the fowls went to their roosts. . . . At night it was so inky dark that a person could not see his hand when held up, nor even a white sheet of paper."—WILLIAM LITTLE, History of Ware, New Hampshire, p. 276.

Notice how dark it was that night, even though the moon was approximately at her full:

"That this darkness was not caused by an eclipse, is manifest by the various positions of the planetary bodies at that time. For the moon was more than one hundred and fifty degrees from the sun all that day, and, according to the accurate calculations made by the most celebrated astronomers, there could not, in the order of nature, be any transit of the planet Venus or Mercury upon the disc of the sun that year."—R. M. DEVENS, Our First Century, p. 95.

Later that night when the moon became visible, it was a lurid red, thus fulfilling the words of the revelator, "The moon became as blood." "And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood." Rev. 6:12.

Christ mentioned another great sign in the heavens: "The stars shall fall from heaven." "There shall be signs," said Jesus, not only "in the sun, and in the moon," but also "in the stars." Luke 21:25.

On the night of November 13, 1833, this prophecy had a remarkable fulfillment, and the most amazing celestial display of falling stars took place that has ever been witnessed.

"The most sublime phenomenon of shooting stars, of which the world has furnished any record, was witnessed throughout the United States on the morning of the 13th of November, 1833. The entire extent of this astonishing exhibition has not been precisely ascertained, but it covered no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface. The first appearance was that of fireworks of the most imposing grandeur, covering the entire vault of heaven with myriads of fire balls resembling skyrockets. Their coruscations were bright, gleaming, and incessant, and they fell thick as the flakes in the early snow of December."—BURRIT, Geography of the Heavens.

The revelator described this great event thus: "And the stars of heaven fell to the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." Rev. 6:13. In many comments of the day the similarity of the vision was emphasized:

"Here is the exactness of the prophet. The falling stars did not come as if from several trees shaken, but from one. Those which appeared in the east fell toward the east; those which appeared in the north fell toward the north; those which appeared in the west fell toward the west; and those which appeared in the south (for I went out of my residence into the park) fell toward the south; and they fell, not as ripe fruit falls; far from it; but they flew, they were cast, like the unripe fig, which at first refuses to leave the branch; and when it does break its hold, flies swiftly, straight off, descending; and in the multitude falling, some cross the track of others, as they are thrown with more or less force."—Journal of Commerce (New York), Nov. 16, 1833.

As the Wise Men were guided by a star when Christ came to earth the first time, so great signs have been hung in the heavens to let us know that His second coming is near.

When God made the "lights in the firmament of the heaven," one of their functions was to be for "signs." (Gen. 1:14.) Joel was inspired to write, "And

Questions From Youth

ANSWERED BY ARCH A. O. DART

Is Everett an Exception to the Rule?

I know our church teaches, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," and as a rule, I think it is fine, but do you not think there are exceptions? Everett and I have been friends for several years, and frankly I do not see how a young man could be nicer than he is. He is a good moral boy, industrious, kind, and considerate. He knows I am a Seventh-day Adventist, and he knows what we teach. He is willing for me to be a member and says it should never mar our happiness at all, for both of us know what the other believes. Do you not think that we could have a successful home together?

Your question is very similar to one that appeared in the Review a few months ago. You might be interested in a letter I received in regard to this very question.

"In the Review I read one of your 'Questions From Youth,' which was titled 'Will Frank Make Me a Good Husband?' I know the reasons you gave the girl were the best ones, but I would like her to hear my short story, so she will see that there are other vital reasons why she should not take an unbeliever for her husband. No doubt he has all the very fine qualities she mentions and even more. But tell the dear girl to picture the future as it will be a few years hence.

"You love your husband very dearly. You also love your children as any mother does. Your desires and wishes for them are all good. These times demand that their education be in our schools for their best spiritual interests. You have a constant longing to send them to our schools, but your husband, who has hoped you'd change to his way of thinking, doesn't want to send them. He thinks they can get from the public schools an education that will be good enough. Neither can he see why they must have so much Bible teaching. He is kind and considerate, but the children feel insecure. He isn't interested in prayer and Bible study with you or with them. On the other hand, he wants to take you and them to the movies.

"At times you feel so discouraged and mean for treating him the way you do. You wonder whether you are treating him fair. You love him and wish to do anything you can to help him accept the truth, which you know is so wonderful. You realize that if you are faithful, there is a chance he will accept too, but there is also the big chance that he will not. He is just as anxious for you to come his way.

"Now, if you really love your friend, don't make his life miserable and yours so sad. Let him find someone with whom he can be companionable. And let God have His way with you. He has plans that you will like and that will bring you happiness. Give God a chance to do this for you is my prayer for you and all other young folks in your circumstances.

"Signed Mrs. ———."

I will shew wonders in the heavens. . . . The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come." Joel 2:30, 31.

Isaiah predicted, "For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine." Isa. 13:10.

History answers that Christ's words concerning the signs in the heavens have been fulfilled. It must be that we are living near the end of all things earthly and that soon the peoples of the earth "shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

The first coming of Jesus was a matter of specific prophecy; so is His second coming. Can it be thought plausible that so many prophecies would be given concerning Christ's first advent and none concerning His second coming in glory and power? It is unthinkable!

[This is the first in a series of articles on the important question, "Why I Believe the End Is Near" by Elder Nightingale.—Editor.]

Getting Along With People

By Harold Shryock, M.D.

My son and I were traveling in the State of Oregon. It was about nine o'clock in the morning, and we had stopped in a town to make some purchases. As we walked along the sidewalk we met a man who attracted our attention. He was a total stranger, but there was something about the expression on his face that made us feel acquainted. In fact, as we passed him we just naturally said, "Good morning."

As we walked on we attempted to answer our own question on what factors contributed to his ability to radiate friendliness.

Actually there is no mystery surrounding this ability to get along with people. The method is as clear and simple as is the statement of the golden rule: Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you.

The best method of learning how to get along with people is to perform a laboratory experiment with yourself as the subject. Ask yourself two questions: (1) What is it that I like about other people? (2) What is it that I do not like about other people? Write down all the answers that come to your mind. Then apply these to yourself, and you will be able to do the things that people like and avoid the things that people do not like.

In case you find it difficult to jot down your likes and dislikes as they relate to other people, I will give you, herewith, the lists that came to my mind as I put into practice the advice I have just given.

Desirable Traits

Cordiality.—This is the trait that my son and I admired in the stranger that we met on the street. There was something about his facial expression and attitude that indicated that he found his greatest pleasure in being friendly. To him every stranger was a potential friend.

Willing helpfulness.—The test of friendship is the willingness to come to the rescue when needed. You appreciate this trait in other people. Similarly, they will appreciate it in you. This attitude of helpfulness is the proper price a person pays for having real friends.

Willingness to listen.—In analyzing your own reactions you will find that one of the things you especially appreciate in others is their willingness to listen to what you have to say. It is human for you to enjoy expressing your opinions and telling your experiences. When you find someone who enjoys listening to you, you feel that you have found a treasure. Just so, when the tables are reversed! The other person also enjoys expressing his opinions and telling of his experiences. If you are willing to show him the deference of listening, he will naturally like you and will enjoy his personal contacts with you.

Recognition of good judgment.—We human beings pride ourselves on being creatures of logic rather than of instinct. But many of our decisions are based on whims of the moment rather than on sound reasoning. Of course our major decisions are premeditated. We try to use our best judgment. So it is natural to take credit for wise decisions and to ignore the unwise ones.

Inasmuch, therefore, as a person is rightfully proud of his good judgment, it is appropriate for you to recognize and mention the evidences of others' good judgment. You never suffer by giving credit where credit is due. When you honestly admire your friend's new suit, tell him so. This indicates that you consider he exercised good judgment in its selection. When the children in a home are well mannered, mention this to the parents, for it indicates that you consider they have exercised good judgment in their dealings with the children.

Recognition of worthy accomplishments.—When you have done well in leading your Sabbath school class through the study of a difficult lesson, it is encouraging to have some member express his appreciation. When you have built a garage that is neat and well proportioned, you like to have a friend compliment you. When you have baked a good cake, you welcome some word of gratitude from those who have enjoyed it. So, in your dealings with others, cultivate the habit of making mention of worthy accomplishments. When carried on in sincerity, the motives prompting such expressions of appreciation cannot be misunderstood. They bring cheer and encouragement and tend to bind friends closer.

Consideration in giving counsel.—Thinking back over your loyal friends of the past, you remember certain people who are outstanding. Possibly the one you now appreciate most was one who gave you needed counsel at a time you were in danger of making some mistake. It may even have been difficult for you to accept this counsel at the time it was given. Subsequent events, however, have led you to appreciate it, and especially the kindly spirit in which it was given.

There are times when every true friend must sound a note of warning. This is one of the important functions of friendship. But the giving of counsel poses a delicate situation. All proper precaution should be used to avoid humiliation or open censure. Serious counsel should not be given in the presence of other people.

Traits to Be Avoided

The habit of ridiculing.—Ridicule is not pleasant to receive. It injures one's self-esteem. Constructive criticism may be necessary at times, but open ridicule can seldom, if ever, be justified. The normal response to ridicule is to retaliate in kind, returning blame to the critic. Thus ridicule has the effect of separating friends.

Know-it-all attitude.—The know-it-all attitude is typical of immaturity. The person with this trait says in effect, "If you want to be a friend of mine, you will have to believe what I tell you, and not challenge the correctness of my statements." This is often a protective mechanism by which he assumes an air of cocksureness in place of admitting ignorance.

The application of this observation to your own program of cultivating friendliness requires that you use tact in dealing with those who may be misinformed. There are even times when it is more kindly to allow a misstatement to go unchallenged than to humiliate a friend by pointing out his error. Do not set yourself up as an encyclopedia. Allow the other person the "privilege" of being wrong once in a while.

Moodiness.—Moodiness is a most disagreeable trait. The moody person demands, as it were, that you show him special consideration by humoring him when he does not choose to be cheerful.

It is natural for a person to feel better some days than others. A person's feelings can be controlled, however. This is proved by the large number of people who have learned never to admit when they feel downcast or melancholy.

for those who have spent their lives under the protective wings of the church to realize the vast differences between the philosophies of the modern world and "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." But we must understand this if we are going to help our youth.

Every year the gulf widens between these liberal thinkers and those who still hold to the basic standards of the Christian church. Because of this the young people of our time are being trained to despise and to reject all authority. There is no longer any respect for the past. In many educational circles the greatest characters of history are held up to ridicule. We need not wonder that Paul described our day as a time when young folks would be "disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection."

The real question is, How are we as parents going to help our young people meet this situation in which they find themselves? They cannot help absorbing some of these foolish notions. We can never help our young people by criticizing them, nor by making unfavorable comparisons between the present and the "good old days." Some of those days were a long way from perfect. Our young folks need intelligent and spiritual leadership. They need parents and friends who can be patient with them. They need older associates who can tactfully guide them away from the evil philosophies of our age. They need kindness and understanding, not pessimistic criticism.

No Rule for Every Case

In handling young people it is well to realize that there are no rules that fit every case, not even among members of the same family. Methods that may succeed with one may completely fail with another. Every young person must be treated individually. Regardless of whether children of the same family may look alike, their personalities may be vastly different. Even identical twins may be quite opposite in nature. Every parent should spend enough time with each child to know his real needs and to help him as an individual. Remember, standard rules of training are bound to fail, for the human spirit refuses to be regimented.

To be a good parent requires much tact and self-control. All too often we blunder along, making enemies of our children, simply because we are ignorant of the basic principles of family life. Jesus came to reveal the very nature of God, not as a stern disciplinarian, but as a loving Father. We may drive our children until they hate us, or we may so fill their lives with love that they are ours forever.

Avoid Family Favoritism

Some parents never seem to grow up. They just want to remain foolish adolescents all their lives. Some of them are silly, and lovesick, and immature, and their children grow up to despise them.

Other parents seem to resent the presence of children in the home. They become jealous of each other and of the children. In their desire to have the predominant position in the home, they may force a young child to choose a favorite parent. Such actions are cruel to children. No youngster should ever have to choose between his father and his mother. Both should be equally dear to him, and one should complement the other. It is morally wrong to force a young child to make such a choice, even in fun. What may appear as rather amusing to an adult

A Story for the Children

BY ARTHUR S. MAXWELL

Stories of the Exodus—11

Three Dark Days

It is surprising how many times some people have to be punished before they learn to do right.

You would think that after Pharaoh had seen all the water of the Nile turned to blood, after he had had frogs jumping all over his palace, and swarms of lice and flies tormenting him to death, he would have come to see that the God of Moses and Aaron, who had sent these dreadful plagues, was not a God to be trifled with. But as soon as each plague ceased he hardened his heart again.

So he had to suffer some more.

Soon the cattle of Egypt began to die in droves, thousands of them. Then painful boils broke out on the people. Next there came a frightful storm with thunder, lightning, and hail such as Egypt had never seen before. It broke down every tree and flattened the entire crop of flax and barley. Then came myriads of locusts, which ate every green thing that remained after the storm.

This meant ruin and starvation to every Egyptian family. It meant ruin for the government too, for there would be no money for taxes. And while everybody was wondering what dreadful thing would happen next, a great darkness fell upon the land. The Bible says that it was so dark that people couldn't see each other.

At the end of the third dark day Pharaoh again sent for Moses and Aaron. Just how he found them we are not told.

"Go!" said Pharaoh, angrily, as the two men came before him. "Go, serve the Lord!"

This time he was willing for all the Israelites to go—men, women, and children. But not their cattle. With all the cattle of Egypt killed, he naturally had his eye on the Hebrews' cattle, which had been spared.

But Moses would not agree. The Hebrews would take their cattle with them. They would need them for sacrifices, he said.

This made Pharaoh madder than ever.

"Get out!" he cried. "See my face no more; for in that day that thou seest my face thou shalt die."

Moses was beginning to get angry now, and he said something full of meaning that Pharaoh did not understand—not then.

"Thou hast spoken well," he said, coldly. "I will see thy face again no more."

Then, with rising wrath, he told the king that one last terrible plague was about to fall upon him and his rebellious people.

"And Moses said, Thus saith the Lord, About midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt: and all the firstborn in the land of Egypt shall die, from the firstborn of Pharaoh that sitteth upon his throne, even unto the firstborn of the maidservant that is behind the mill; and all the firstborn of beasts. And there shall be a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt. . . . And all these thy servants shall come down unto me, and bow down themselves unto me, saying, Get thee out, and all the people that follow thee: and after that I will go out. And he went out from Pharaoh in a great anger" (Ex. 11:4-8).

The darkness had passed by now, and as Moses strode through the streets, with Aaron at his side, the people looked at them in awe. By obeying God's word and following God's leadings, Moses had gained more power in Egypt than he ever dreamed of having forty years before, when he tried to save Israel by himself.

Now things began to happen fast. Knowing that only a few hours remained before the great exodus would begin, Moses gave orders that the Hebrews should visit the Egyptians and collect the wages they had not been paid for years. They were to ask for "jewels of silver, and jewels of gold." And the Egyptians paid up. They were too scared to do anything else.

Then word was sent from home to home through all the land of Goshen, to every Hebrew family: This is the night of deliverance. Tonight God will smite all the firstborn of Egypt. Pharaoh will then let us go. Pack your things. Tomorrow we shall be on our way to freedom!

Imagine the excitement everywhere. It all seemed too good to be true. Old men and women, who had toiled long years for the Egyptians, and had been beaten many times by the taskmasters, cried out with thankful hearts, Thank God!

Boys and girls looked up into their mothers' faces and asked, "Are we really going away, Mamma? Where to? To the land flowing with milk and honey you told us about?"

And when their mothers said, "Yes, darlings, that's just where we are going," they cried out in glee, dancing and jumping around, "Oh, goody, goody, we're off to the land of Canaan!"

may have serious consequences in the mind of an adolescent or a child. The Master said, "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 18:10).

Who can measure the pain and sorrow in the hearts of millions today because of broken homes? Every town, almost every street, has its sorrowing hearts that bleed. It is not the husbands and wives who suffer so much. Their situation is bad enough. But it is the children who suffer, and the younger they are the worse the tragedy. Too many within our own church tend to consider the marriage vows as something that can be set aside at will. Selfishness on the part of one or both parents is usually responsible for any broken home. O that God would help us to give more and demand less! We realize that some divorces are inevitable, and are Scripturally permitted. But a great many homes now going on the rocks could be saved by intelligent help from some doctor or minister who knows how to deal with personal problems.

There are no ideal mates this side of heaven. The person who thinks the pastures look greener on some other hill is only fooling himself. Breaking up one's home for someone else will never bring a person anything but the deepest sense of guilt, whether he be an Adventist or an agnostic. Every doctor meets these disillusioned people, most of whom have acted on the impulse of the moment. They are sick in body and in mind, secretly wishing they could live their lives over again. It never pays to break the divine laws.

State of Mind Affects Health

Several years ago an ambulance rushed to one of our hospitals with a man who was almost dead from a bleeding peptic ulcer. For weeks he hovered between life and death. He was given many blood transfusions. His recovery was very slow and painful. But every day he seemed to be more unhappy—as if he carried a deep sense of guilt. He occupied a very responsible position in the Federal Government. Senators held him in high esteem, but he was a desperately unhappy man.

Some years before his illness his home had been broken up. It was largely his own fault, but not entirely. After a bitter quarrel his wife and young son moved out. Another woman moved in. Much gaiety and high living followed. He tried to drown his grief in liquor, and to burn up his past with chain smoking. For some time he put on a cheery front, trying to convince the world that he was happy. But in his quiet moments he was utterly miserable. He dared not give himself too much time to think.

Secretly he longed for his old home and his boy, but his pride prevented him from inviting his wife and son back. Now his inner conflict was crushing him. He began to fail in his work. The strain of constant unhappiness was too much for him. He had a deep sense of the wrong he had done. But he could not bring himself to acknowledge it. Gnawing pains developed in his abdomen, and he steadily went downhill.

Then the bleeding began, just a little at first. At times he made a partial recovery. At other times he was much worse. Then the big hemorrhage occurred, and he collapsed. The ulcer had eroded a large blood vessel. Most of his stomach was removed at the operation. But scars remain, not only in his body, but also in the life of his boy, now nine years of age. This man may be a great lawyer, but as a father he is still a hopeless failure.

It is a solemn responsibility to be a parent. We need to be tolerant with each other, and kind and considerate to our children. Never for a moment should we allow ourselves to deviate from the pathway of right and truth. Never should we make light of the marriage responsibilities or the home. Never should we, even in fun, ask a child or a youth if he would care to have someone else as his Mother or Dad. If there are differences in the home, they should be settled as soon as possible under the loving influence of the Holy Spirit.

The eternal destinies of our children and youth are in our hands. We need much of the saving grace of God in our own lives every day if we are to guide these priceless children and youth into the kingdom. We need to realize that our words, our actions, even our attitudes, may either open or close the gates of heaven to the children within our homes and our churches. May God help us to so live that we may meet all our children in the kingdom of our Redeemer at last.

Of all who claim to be numbered among the friends of temperance, Seventh-day Adventists should stand in the front ranks. —Gospel Workers, p. 384.

Questions From Mothers—9

What to Do About Whining

By Archa O. Dart

Question

My little four-year-old girl has the habit of whining about everything she is asked to do. I thought she would outgrow this baby habit, but it is getting worse and worse. It seems that she is either sobbing or crying most of the time. Nothing I do seems to cheer her up. Should I just ignore it, or try to do something about it?

Answer

You must do something about it. This is a very dangerous habit that will not be outgrown. First of all, have the little girl examined by a physician to see whether she has some physical ailment. Check up on the following: Is she getting enough sleep? A four-year-old ought to be getting at least twelve hours of sleep a day. Are her eating habits good? Eating between meals or nibbling on candy can keep the stomach upset, and when the stomach is upset, the disposition is also. Does she feel that she is loved and wanted? She may need to be cuddled and loved more. Does she have cheerful, pleasant surroundings? Cheerfulness is very important from a mental hygiene viewpoint. Is Daddy always cheerful? Is Mother? Does she have plenty of free time to play outdoors? All of these have a very definite bearing on her attitude. Find the source of her trouble and eliminate it just as soon as possible.

But if the habit of whining still stays with her, it must be corrected; otherwise it might contribute to a mental disorder. Play little games with her, like finding a pretty girl in the mirror. Whiny girls are ugly, but smiling girls are pretty. Avoid calling attention to her whining. Talk about her smiling. Mother might say, "Oh, how lovely you look when you smile." Never let her have a thing when she whines for it. Say, "When my little sunshine girl asks for it she will get it, but no one else." Or, "Smiles are the only things that work around here." It will not take long for the average child to change her habits when she sees that whining never brings her what she wants, but smiling does. We compliment her smiles, we talk of her smiles, and, of course, we smile ourselves.

Now after a fair trial, if these measures fail to bring about a reformation and she still sits and sobs, more drastic measures must be used. One father, realizing that he was about to have a mental case on his hands, was driven to "try anything." He decided to put his hand over his little daughter's mouth whenever she started to cry. He sat there for five minutes, ten, fifteen, twenty. His arm nearly gave out, but Mother was ready to take over. After thirty minutes—a very long time for a child—she stopped sobbing, the clouds disappeared, she began to smile. The battle had been won, and the child has been much happier ever since.

oppose the message of reform on this point: . . . The Lord has given us the work of "proclaiming the message of health reform, and if you cannot step forward in the ranks of those who are giving this message, you are not to make this prominent. In counter-working the efforts of your fellow laborers who are teaching health reform, you are out of order, working on the wrong side."—Evangelism, pp. 664, 665.

For years, during the lifetime of the Lord's servant, earnest messages came to the church through the gift of the Spirit of prophecy appealing for God's people to lead out in a bold reform in healthful living. It was repeatedly urged that this was a part of the third angel's message. Its relationship to the body of the message was to be as the right arm to the body.

Shall we not give to this phase of the great message of truth the prominence that it deserves, both in our personal living and in our public ministry? May God help us to do so.

General Conference Session Recommendation

At the time of the General Conference session in 1936 earnest study was given to the importance of the health reform work, and it was recognized that many had failed to appreciate the importance of this phase of our message to the world.

It was felt that some word of counsel and appeal should be sent out to our people regarding the matter and, accordingly, the following message was prepared and published:

Health Principles

"We are told that 'When the third angel's message is received in its fullness, health reform will be given its place in the councils of the conference, in the work of the church, in the home, at the table, and in all household arrangements.'—Testimonies, vol. 6, p. 227.

"We express as our conviction that there has been in some measure through the years a failure to heed this counsel. We appreciate the loyalty to this instruction which has marked the lives of many of our devoted brethren and sisters. We recognize also that the large majority of our workers have been true to these principles. It is to be regretted, however, that some have not fully sensed the responsibility of leadership in being examples to the church in the observance of health principles. We believe that the time has fully come when the principles of healthful living should be given their heaven-designed place in the practice and teaching of every church leader and of the church at large.

"We, therefore, as the representatives of the Seventh-day Adventist church assembled in Autumn Council, voice our high regard for the principles of health given to this people. We recommend that these principles receive the hearty and sympathetic support of our leaders and people throughout the world.

"It would be quite impossible to specify the various details of these principles. They pertain to the food we eat and the air we breathe, to exercise and rest, to the use of water for drinking and bathing and in the treatment of disease, to the clothing we wear, to our homes and their surroundings, to the use of drugs and narcotics, to the preparation of food and a balanced dietary, to the state of the mind and its influence on the functioning of the physical organs, and other details too numerous to mention in this connection.

"We believe that the question of diet constitutes a most important phase of healthful living, and because of the great danger to health attending the use of flesh foods that our workers and people, especially under conditions where a balanced non-flesh dietary is available, should choose their dietary from non-flesh foods, making use of flesh only under exceptional circumstances as an emergency food.

"Our workers should present our health principles the same as every other phase of present truth to the church of Christ, and by their own personal example lead the members of the church in faithful obedience to the instruction we have received. Every individual should apply these principles faithfully, in his own personal experience and in a spirit of generosity to his brethren. We call upon every conference and institutional worker throughout the world field to unite with us in this high and holy purpose.

"We recommend, That instruction in health principles be given in connection with our coming union conference sessions and in our camp meetings and other important church gatherings as can consistently be done, thus carrying into effect the resolutions regarding the question of health teaching which were passed at the last General Conference."—From General Conference Minutes, Oct. 27, 1936, p. 154.

Although some eighteen years have passed since then, we believe this word of appeal is needed as much today as it was in 1936. May the Lord help each one of us to relate himself to this and to every other important phase of the work and message that has been committed to this people in such a way as to bring glory to God and blessings to the church.

Christ's Letters to His Churches—6

Philadelphia: Era of Love and Service

By Roy F. Cottrell

The city of Philadelphia in Asia Minor was founded in the second century B.C. by Attalus Philadelphus, whose brother was king of Lydia. Between these two rulers sincere love and affection is said to have existed; and in some way this city of reputed brotherly love was christened Philadelphia. Also because of its stately temples and public buildings, it was sometimes called Little Athens.

Philadelphia, situated in a mountain pass, was built upon a natural terrace having four rounded summits. In this commanding position it guarded the door or gateway to the important ancient trade route between cities of Asia Minor and the East. Along the centuries, Philadelphia has suffered severely from numerous earthquakes and from prolonged sieges by hostile armies. It is now a decadent, sprawling city of some ten thousand inhabitants. Its modern name is Alasehir, variously translated as "exalted city," or "red city," the latter indicating the color of the soil.

In the prophetic message to the church of Philadelphia the seer of Patmos is instructed to write: "These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shut-teth, and no man openeth; I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it; for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name" (Rev. 3:7, 8).

Signs of the End Appear

The promise was also given, "Behold, I come quickly" (verse 11). This announcement naturally establishes the time period covered by this church. The attention of multitudes was directed to the prophecies of the Word by the spectacular signs that God hung in the heavens. The notable dark day of history, with its portentous, inky shroud covering New England and neighboring areas, occurred on May 19, 1780, and the moon was darkened the following night. On November 13, 1833, in the eastern sections of North America, there was witnessed the phenomenon of falling stars, declared to be "the greatest display of celestial fireworks" ever witnessed by man.

With the appearance of these signs there also developed a quickening of missionary zeal and activity. In 1893 William Carey sailed for India, to be followed later by such intrepid ambassadors of the cross as Robert Morrison to China, Adoniram Judson to Burma, John Paton to the South Seas, Moffat and Livingstone to Africa, and a multitude of others.

In 1804 the British and Foreign Bible Society was founded, and twelve years later the American Bible Society began its beneficent service for enlightenment of mankind. The church was gripped anew with the urgency of the great commission, "Go ye into all the world," and the era of modern missionary endeavor was nobly launched.

During those years of spiritual awakening, devout Bible students began an intensive and systematic study of Scripture prophecy. Among these was William Miller, of Low Hampton, New York. He especially applied himself to a prayerful and earnest investigation of the books of Daniel and Revelation; and becoming fully convinced that the coming of the Lord was near at hand, he began preaching and publishing the good tidings.

Hundreds of clergymen joined him in the great evangelistic campaign that stirred the United States from north to south. In other lands God moved upon the hearts of many distinguished religious leaders to proclaim the imminence of Christ's second coming, among whom were Edward Irving of England, Joseph Wolff who labored in various parts of Asia, Leonard Kelber of Germany, and Lacunza (known also as Ben Ezra) of Spain and South America.

Throughout many lands the tidings sounded, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him" (Matt. 25:6). This message brought great searching of heart and consecration to God. Confessions were made; differences were put aside; believers united in their efforts to warn the world of the approaching Advent; praise to God ascended from every heart; members of the "little flock" were experiencing their "first love," and were bound together in pure and fervent devotion. To them the name Philadelphia, or "brotherly love," was altogether appropriate.

The Great Disappointment

But the time of Christ's expected appearance passed, and the waiting people met crushing disappointment. Further study revealed that they were correct in the computation of the time, but wrong in the event to take place. On October 22, 1844, the 2300 days (prophetic years) of Daniel 8:14 expired. But instead of coming to earth as the believers had anticipated, Christ, our great High Priest, entered the holy of holies for His closing ministry in the heavenly sanctuary. "The judgment was set, and the books were opened" (Dan. 7:10).

In these events we observe the beautiful symbolism employed in the prophetic message to the church of this era. As old Philadelphia was a key city located in a mountain pass, and guarding the door, or gateway, to the ancient caravan route, so Christ is represented as having the key, or position of authority.

He holds the key to death and the grave (Rev. 1:18).

He holds the key to the most holy place of the heavenly sanctuary, which was opened in 1844, at the close of the 2300 years.

He holds the key to the door of probation, which will be closed when His priestly ministration is completed (Rev. 22:11).

He also holds the key to the gates of Paradise, and issues to all the gracious invitation, "Come" (Rev. 22:14-17).

Today God's people should realize that they are living in the closing moments of the great judgment hour. Very soon each one will be required to face the record in the books. The door to the first apartment of the sanctuary has finally closed. But, praise God, we still have access through the open door to the second apartment where Christ ministers in our behalf! As we surrender all, His blood will cleanse every stain.

No Words of Censure

A study of the seven churches reveals that persecuted Smyrna and ardent Philadelphia are the only two who received no word of censure or reproof. The members of the latter were sorely buffeted by the "synagogue of Satan" (Rev. 3:9), but (Parents are invited to send to the REVIEW unusual comments in the field of religion or religious principles made by children under ten years of age. When you write, be sure to give the setting for the statement and the child's age.—EDITOR.)

Jennifer is only three years old, but not too young to let her light shine for Jesus. Heaven is very real to her, and she looks forward to her trip through the shining sky when the angels come to take her home with the Saviour.

Several weeks ago we took her on a trip with us to Portland, Oregon, to see her grandparents. One night we drove to the summit of a hill in one of Portland's beautiful city parks to observe the bright lights shining below. It was such a thrill for her, since we live in a small town where there are few colorful lights.

We drove around the other side of this beautiful hill, where a much bigger surprise was in store for little Jennifer. Off in the distance we could see another town with its bright lights twinkling in the heavy darkness. As our little three-year-old beheld the beautiful sight, she cried out in childish glee, "Oh, look, Mommy, it's the city of God."

Her words inspired us all to be more faithful to the truth and ready for the great thrill that awaits us when Jesus comes and we rise above the darkness of this old world to behold for the first time the city of our God.

MRS. ROY F. SCHMUNK

the assuring promise was given: "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth" (Rev. 3:10).

The Hour of Temptation

In 1844 when the day of expectancy passed and Christ had not appeared to deliver His people, many were confused and discouraged. That was indeed an hour of temptation. But while He did not return at that time, He reassured the believers, saying, "Behold, I come quickly" (Rev. 3:11). Then, lest anyone should doubt and draw back, He added, "Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown" (verse 11).

Because of the hardness of the human heart, and the long-suffering of God, the fulfillment of the divine promises may at times appear delayed; but, brother, sister, take heart. "Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry" (Heb. 10:35-37).

Promise to Overcomers

Faithfulness will ensure a glorious reward, and to the Philadelphian believers, He who holds the key to eternal riches, testified: "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name" (Rev. 3:12).

For long centuries a tall and stately pillar stood among the ruins of ancient Philadelphia, a reminder of the grandeur that had forever perished. In contrast with a crumbling, moss-covered column, the victorious Christian is to become a "living" stone, or imperishable pillar in the temple of God that will stand throughout endless ages.

History further records that the most severe earthquake to visit the city of Philadelphia occurred in A.D. 17. After this destructive catastrophe a Roman emperor contributed some $600,000 to assist in reconstruction; and in appreciation to the donor the citizens named the rebuilt city Neo-Caesarea. Later, it was again changed to Flavia in honor of emperor Flavius Vespasian.

In like manner the new names of this rebuilt city may symbolize the new names of transformed character to be conferred upon the overcomers. On each victor will be written the name of God, to whom he belongs, the name of the New Jerusalem, which is his delightful destination, and Christ's new name, by virtue of which he obtains eternal redemption.

We are told that in the city of Ottawa, Canada, there stands a beautiful structure known as Peace Tower. On its ponderous panels of stone are engraved the names of all Canadian servicemen who participated in World War I; and on a marble altar lies a golden book in which are written the names of all who, in behalf of freedom, made the supreme sacrifice.

In the archives of heaven there is another massive volume, not a book of death, but a book of life in which are recorded the names of all who have enlisted in the warfare for eternal life. Names will be blotted out. Names will be retained. Crowns will be awarded.

May God enable us each to hold fast in the hours of trial before us; then the new name of character will be inscribed by an angel penman, and the overcomer will obtain "a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

I Believe in Choirs

By Eva Jeune McAssey

I believe in music in general and choirs in particular. The Bible and the Spirit of prophecy support this belief.

At the tower of Babel, God confounded the language that united the builders in their heaven-defying pursuit. But God did nothing at that time to interfere with spiritual communication. Music at that time was, and even today is, the only language left by heaven that remains a universal language. It is a language that has been left by which mortals may commune with heaven. This is because it is a means to express God's love.

We read that "as our Redeemer leads us to the threshold of the Infinite, flushed with the glory of God, we may catch the themes of praise and thanksgiving from the heavenly choir round about the throne; and as the echo of the angels' song is awakened in our earthly homes, hearts will be drawn closer to the heavenly singers. Heaven's communion begins on earth. We learn here the keynote of its praise."—Education, p. 168.

Music is a part of God's worship in the courts above. And so it should be on earth. "We should endeavor, in our songs of praise, to approach as nearly as possible to the harmony of the heavenly choirs."—Patriarchs and Prophets, p. 594. "The nearer the people of God can approach to correct, harmonious singing, the more is He glorified, the church benefited, and unbelievers favorably affected."—Testimonies, vol. 1, p. 146.

In ancient times God established music in His sanctuary. The ark of God was escorted to the temple "with singing and with music and with great ceremony."—Prophets and Kings, p. 38.

We read that at the time of the dedication of Solomon's Temple, "It came even to pass as the trumpeters and singers were as one, . . . and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of musick, and praised the Lord, saying, For he is good; his mercy endureth forever: that then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the Lord; so that the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud; for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of God" (2 Chron. 5:13, 14).

There were 288 voices that were instructed in the songs of the Lord (see 2 Chron. 5:7). Four thousand praised the Lord with instruments (see 1 Chron. 23:5).

God called singers to lead the forces of Israel to victory in battle (see 2 Chron. 20:21, 22). "It was a singular way of going to battle against the enemy's army—praising the Lord with singing, and exalting the God of Israel. This was their battle-song. They possessed the beauty of holiness.

"If more praising of God were engaged in now, hope and courage and faith would steadily increase. And would not this strengthen the hands of the valiant soldiers who to-day are standing in defense of truth?"—Prophets and Kings, p. 202.

Angels Sang at Jesus' Birth

Then, too, God's choir announced the birth of His Son. "The whole plain was lighted up with the bright shining of the hosts of God. Earth was hushed, and heaven stooped to listen to the song, 'Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.'"—The Desire of Ages, p. 48.

Prayer for Strength

By ANNA ROSS CLOOS

Dear Father, as I kneel today
In agony of soul,
Help me to place my hand in Thine
When waves of trouble roll.

Be Thou near to comfort
And to strengthen me today;
As Satan's darts of doubt are hurled,
Help me to win the fray.

The foe would break me down, dear Lord,
And tempt me to despair;
Oh, help me then to realize
Thy kind and loving care!

Through every trial, affliction, doubt,
When Satan's darts molest,
Help me to hear Thy gentle call,
"Come unto me—and rest."

Jesus fought the enemy with song. This is clearly revealed in the Spirit of prophecy. "It was He who filled the earth with beauty and the air with song." While dwelling in Nazareth "often He expressed the gladness of His heart by singing psalms and heavenly songs. Often the dwellers in Nazareth heard His voice raised in praise and thanksgiving to God. He held communion with heaven in song; and as His companions complained of weariness from labor, they were cheered by the sweet melody from His lips. His praise seemed to banish the evil angels, and, like incense, fill the place with fragrance."—The Desire of Ages, p. 73.

"With the voice of singing He welcomed the morning light. With songs of thanksgiving He cheered His hours of labor, and brought heaven's gladness to the toilworn and disheartened."—The Ministry of Healing, p. 52.

The Song in the Upper Room

Jesus once led a group to sing in a time of crisis. "Before leaving the upper chamber, the Saviour led His disciples in a song of praise. His voice was heard, not in the strains of some mournful lament, but in the joyful notes of the Passover hallel: 'O praise the Lord, all ye nations; praise Him all ye people. For His merciful kindness is great toward us; and the truth of the Lord endureth forever. Praise ye the Lord.'"—The Desire of Ages, p. 672. At the resurrection as Jesus came forth from the grave, "the angel host bow low with adoration before the Redeemer and welcome Him with songs of praise," the soldiers "saw the brightness of the angels illuminate the night, and heard the inhabitants of heaven singing with great joy."—Ibid., p. 780. As Jesus was parted from His disciples, "A cloud of glory hid Him from their sight; and the words came back to them as the cloudy chariot of angels received Him, 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.' At the same time there floated down to them the sweetest and most joyous music from the angel choir."—Ibid., p. 831.

At the ascension of Jesus the angel escorts sang a rapturous melody. "The heavenly host, with shouts and acclamation of praise and celestial song, attended the joyous train. . . . Then the portals of the city of God are opened wide, and the angelic throng sweep through the gates amid a burst of rapturous music."—Ibid., p. 833.

Yes, even God the Father sings. "He approaches the Father with whom there is joy over one sinner that repents; who rejoices over one with singing."—Ibid., p. 834.

At the end of the great controversy we will unite our voices in praise to God. "Ten thousand times ten thousand and thousands of thousands of voices unite to swell the mighty chorus of praise."—The Great Controversy, p. 678.

The Second Coming of Christ

By Earle Hilgert

Jesus had told His disciples of the period of great tribulation to come upon His people. This period, as shown by the prophecies of Daniel and the Revelation, was to last for 1260 years, which ended in A.D. 1798.

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days," said Jesus, "shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken" (Matt. 24:29).

These signs were fulfilled near the end of the 1260 years, and in those localities where men's minds were prepared to believe that the time of the end had come. On May 19, 1780, a most remarkable darkening of the sun occurred in the northeastern section of the United States. Recent research work leads us to believe that the darkness covered an area of about 25,000 square miles in central and southern New England and lasted four to five hours in each locality as it progressed from southwest to northeast.

"Since the time of Moses, no period of darkness of equal density, extent, and duration, has ever been recorded."—The Great Controversy, p. 308.

Many who experienced this event saw in it a divine warning. God was preparing a people to receive His final messages to the world: the Dark Day occurred in the very places where the three angels' messages of Revelation 14:6-12 were first to be proclaimed.

In 1831 William Miller began to preach the imminent second coming of Christ to judge the world, the message proclaimed by the angel of Revelation 14:6, 7: "Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come." Two years later, on November 13, 1833, "the last of the signs appeared which were promised by the Saviour as tokens of His second advent. Said Jesus, 'The stars shall fall from heaven.'"—Ibid., p. 333. That night a most remarkable meteoric shower took place, unique in its heaviness and brilliance. It was observed over much of the United States, and, like the Dark Day, was believed by many to be a sign of divine judgment soon to come.

Accompanying these celestial portents are to be signs on earth.

"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken" (Luke 21:25, 26).

No one can deny that these words of Jesus fitly describe the present day. Never have world leaders faced such distressful conditions with such utter perplexity. At a time when man has demonstrated his genius by inventing means to destroy the human race, no one seemingly has the wisdom to avert that disaster. Fear of one's fellow men, and of nature's power in their hands, is the dominating factor in world affairs today.

But Jesus did not leave His people with a gloomy picture. Again He spoke words to cheer their hearts:

"And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (verse 28). "Now learn a parable of the fig tree; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled" (Matt. 24:32-34).

Much discussion has been given to Christ's promise that closes the above passage. Many have speculated regarding the generation to which Jesus referred. In a sense Jesus' prophecy had a double application. It applied both to the destruction of Jerusalem and to the end of the world. It is true that Jerusalem was destroyed within the lifetime of the generation living in Christ's time.

Important to the understanding of Jesus' words is His statement, "Ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the door." This must refer to the latter times. The generation to which Christ referred is that which sees "all these things"—that which understands the full implication of all the signs, both those in the heavens and those among men. This generation, which receives a full understanding of all the signs of the end, will also see all these things fulfilled.

"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they

Minute Meditations

By Harry M. Tippet

Armless Deities

"The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God" (Isa. 52:10).

Literature holds few sadder confessions than that of Heinrich Heine, the German poet, in which he describes his agony of soul when sentenced to death by a fatal illness. He made his last journey to the Louvre to see the art objects he had known so intimately and loved so well. At the end of the long corridor stood the famous marble of the armless Venus de Milo.

"As I entered the hall," he said, "where the most blessed goddess of beauty stands on her pedestal, I well-nigh broke down. I could not forbear falling at her feet and sobbing piteously, so that even a heart of stone must have softened. The goddess gazed at me compassionately, but her look was comfortless, for it seemed as though she were saying, 'Seest thou not that I have no arms and cannot help thee?'"

So it is with all of this world's gods and goddesses. There is no eye to pity and no arm to save. But God is not like that, for "Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that he cannot hear" (Isa. 59:1). Just before Moses climbed Nebo to his lonely death he blessed Israel with the comforting assurance,

"The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms" (Deut. 33:27). Happy are they who find that truth a covert from life's perplexities today.

The armless deities of our modern world are legion. Though not made of wood or costly marble, they are just as real in the minds of millions of people as Dagon to the Philistines or Diana to the Ephesians. They are found in industrial plants and business offices, in the halls of government and in the home. Although not recognized as gods, they nevertheless lead the minds and hearts of men and women captive by the benefits they promise. For they go by the names of success, of security, of wealth and opulence, or of diplomatic protocol. They are as verily worshiped as were the deities of ancient Greece. Men sell their souls to serve them.

These modern gods of mart and palace are hard masters. They drain their worshipers of the very freedoms they seek, for they cannot be appeased save by sacrifice. They take peace of mind and leave anxiety, and demand contentment in return for their shoddy satisfactions. Then in the hour of trouble their devotees find that their gods have no arms with which to minister to their soul's need. To all such, as to the man in the parable who was putting all his trust in new barns and greater harvests, the Bible makes the irrevocable decree, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee" (Luke 12:20).

But the arms of a loving Saviour are still open to a perishing world, and Isaiah's promise, "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom," has been a sustaining assurance to all those who look for the enduring rewards of a life of faith in a mighty Redeemer.

shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other" (verses 30, 31).

The appearance of Christ in heaven is the magnificent, universal sign no power of evil can counterfeit. The wicked themselves will recognize the One descending from heaven as Him whom they have rejected. John, who heard Christ's words on Olivet, many years later beheld this tremendous scene in vision (see Rev. 6:14-17).

After describing His coming and assuring His disciples of its certainty, Jesus concluded His prophecy with a solemn warning lest in their enthusiasm for the fulfillment of the wonders He had revealed, they might expect His coming too soon, and so be discouraged.

"Christ stated plainly to His disciples that He Himself could not make known the day and hour of His second appearing. Had He been at liberty to make this time known, what need would there have been for Him to exhort them to maintain an attitude of constant expectancy?"—MRS. E. G. WHITE in Signs of the Times, Oct. 6, 1898.

Frequently questions are raised as to why Jesus spoke as if His return was imminent, and yet so much time has passed since then. In attempting to explain this, many have given up altogether the expectation of an actual physical return, and have concluded, rather, that Jesus' promises of His coming are fulfilled to each individual soul at death.

Others, while retaining a nominal belief in a literal second coming of Christ, have concluded that it has now been so long delayed that Jesus' prophecies can have no significance for the present time. Both of these types of thinking are wiles of Satan to cause men to become unaware of the disaster impending upon them. The doctrine of the Second Advent, taught by Christ and preached by His disciples, was intended by God to keep His church ever awake and working for Him.

"Christ spoke repeatedly of His second coming to the earth. . . . More than eighteen hundred years have passed since He, who spake as never man spake, uttered these words. He who could utter nothing but truth, made this assertion, which implied that the hour was at hand; but the dead are still in their graves. The Lifegiver's voice has not yet called the sleeping saints from their gloomy prisons, but we have not lost faith, because the predicted hour has not yet arrived. We work on, trusting, and believing, and waiting, not taking one step backward; but obeying the orders of the Captain of our salvation, whose command to His people is, 'Go forward.' . . .

"And, behold, I come quickly. . . . Was Christ a false prophet when He uttered these words? More than eighteen hundred years have passed since John heard this great truth, and the Lord has not yet come to reign. But shall we give up looking for His appearance? Shall we say, 'My Lord delayeth His coming?' See how the specifications of the prophecies have been and are fulfilling. Let us lift up our heads and rejoice; for our redemption draweth nigh. It is nearer than when we first believed. Shall we not wait patiently, filled with courage and faith? Shall we not make ready a people, to stand in the day of final reckoning and judgment?"—MRS. E. G. WHITE in Review and Herald, July 31, 1888.

"Go to your rest at night with every sin confessed. Thus we did when in 1844 we expected to meet our Lord. And now this great event is nearer than when we first believed. Be ye always ready, in the evening, in the morning, and at noon, that when the cry is heard, 'Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet Him,' you may, even though awakened out of sleep, go forth to meet Him with your lamps trimmed and burning."—Testimonies, vol. 9, p. 48.

A Story for the Children

BY ARTHUR S. MAXWELL

Blood on Their Toes

During the next few weeks some exciting things happened. First came the big ceremony when Aaron and his sons were made priests of the sanctuary. Everybody was told to come and see this take place, for it was to be something very, very important.

It must have been a mighty crowd that gathered round the tabernacle that day. I can't imagine how all the thousands of people could possibly have had a good view. Maybe some stood on the surrounding hillsides. But you may be sure the boys and girls got as close to the front line as they could.

And what did they see?

First of all, they saw six people come to the door of the tabernacle. In the center was Moses. In front of him stood Aaron and his four sons, Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar. What interested everybody most, of course, was the fact that Aaron and his sons wore nothing but their "linen breeches," or shorts.

Whatever's going to happen? they all wondered.

Then they saw Moses take water from a basin and begin to wash them. First Aaron, then Nadab, then Abihu, then Eleazar, and finally Ithamar.

"Why's he doing that?" the children asked their parents, who replied, "Because they are going to minister before God in the sanctuary, so they must be clean and pure all over—outside and inside."

Then Moses dressed Aaron in the robes that had been made for him. From a distance they looked very beautiful indeed—for they were of blue, purple, scarlet, and gold, just like the curtains of the sanctuary.

On Aaron's chest Moses placed a handsome breastplate, its twelve jewels each engraved with the name of one of the tribes of Israel, glittering in the bright morning sunshine.

On Aaron's shoulders Moses placed two large onyx stones, set in gold, each engraved with six names of the children of Israel. In this way Aaron was reminded that, as high priest, he must carry the burdens of the people close to his heart—always.

When all these garments were in place, Moses put on Aaron's head a miter which had a solid gold band in front of it bearing the words, "Holiness to the Lord."

The shimmering gold seemed to make the words flash out across the camp, and no one, from the youngest to the oldest, could have had any doubt about what they meant. Aaron was to be a holy man, an example of holiness before all the people.

While all this was going on, Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar had been watching what was happening to their father. As one beautiful garment after another was placed on him, they must have felt very naked indeed.

At last, however, their turn came to be dressed. Going from one to another of the boys, Moses put on each of them a coat, a girdle, and a bonnet. These were nothing like Aaron's, of course, but even so the Bible says they were "for glory and for beauty."

After this a bullock was brought to where the group was standing, and Aaron and his sons all laid their hands on the head of the animal as a mark of their confession of sin. Then Moses slew the animal and sprinkled its blood around the altar.

Then a ram was brought. Again Aaron and his sons laid their hands on the animal's head, after which the ram was killed and its blood sprinkled on the altar.

Next another ram was brought, called "the ram of consecration." Once more—for the third time—the five placed their hands in the same position, as though laying all their sins on the animal. But this time something different happened. Instead of sprinkling the blood of the ram on the altar, Moses put some of it "upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot."

After that he came to the four boys and put some of the blood "upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet" (Lev. 8:23, 24).

Blood on the ear meant that they were not to listen to evil. They were to keep their thoughts pure, clean, and holy.

Blood on the thumb of the right hand meant that they were to use their hands for noble purposes. They were to be consecrated to doing good, helping the poor and needy, and building the kingdom of God.

Blood on their toes meant that they were to walk in the ways of righteousness. They were to follow the path of God's commandments, never wandering into places where God would not want them to go.

We need to be consecrated like this, too—with the blood of Jesus on our ears, our thumbs, and our toes.

• EDITORIALS •

We Capitulate

At the first of the year we announced that in the future editorials would not carry identifying initials. We explained that in adopting this policy we were but following the well-nigh universal practice in the editorial world, including the policy that was, years ago, employed in the REVIEW itself. It never occurred to us that the new policy would particularly concern our readers. To be honest, we did not think that they gave very special attention to the editorial section. Why should they, there are so many other features of great interest in the journal!

But we were mistaken, more mistaken than we have been in many an editorial day. Immediately letters began to come in, and they have continued to come in, protesting the elimination of the initials. Nor could the editors move among our people without being accosted with the plea: Please restore the initials. Frankly, we do not recall any more widespread or emphatic reaction on a change in the REVIEW than the reaction we have experienced on this matter. One sister even wrote that this was her last renewal subscription if the initials were not returned—a kind of threat that is supposed to make the bravest editor quail. A brother said that if we did not like anonymous letters neither did he like anonymous editorials—though strangely enough he knew exactly to whom to write to express his protest, which seemed to make our editorials not quite anonymous.

And so we capitulate! In fact, we do it with a glow of satisfaction—we are only human! Now we know for sure that a very wide circle of our subscribers read the editorial pages. Many thanks for letting us know this, even if it had to be in the setting of a protest. God bless you all—and here are our initials.

F. D. N.

The Dark Day of May 19, 1780

This issue of the REVIEW is dated May 19, 1955. Exactly 175 years ago occurred that remarkable sign in the heavens known as the Dark Day, which fulfilled the prophecy of Jesus recorded in Matthew 24: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light" (verse 29).

"Those days" referred to the tribulation period brought on by papal persecution and described by Daniel as "a time and times and the dividing of time" (Dan. 7:25), and by John as 42 months or 1260 days. (Rev. 13:5; 12:6). Beginning in A.D. 538, this prophetic span of years ended in 1798, when Berthier, at the direction of Napoleon took Pope Pius VI prisoner, and brought a temporary end to papal dominion.

In the gospel of Mark we read that the sun would be darkened "in those days," but "after that tribulation." The public persecution of Protestants ended in Europe about 1773. The Dark Day of May 19, 1780, came "after that tribulation," as the Saviour said it would. This was followed by the falling of the stars on November 13, 1833, another sign foretold by Jesus (Matt. 24:29).

The next specific heavenly token is "the sign of the Son of man in heaven" (Matt. 24:30). Here is a reference to the little black cloud seen in the distance by the waiting saints at the time of Jesus' appearing. This is the actual token of deliverance for the expectant remnant. The sign is the glorious appearance of the Saviour Himself with His angels (see Early Writings, p. 286).

Description of the Dark Day

The Dark Day of May 19, 1780, was the first of the heavenly signs. The remarkable appearance of blood shown in the face of the moon on the night following was also apparent.

D. H. Leggett, a Seventh-day Adventist minister and formerly a student at the Theological Seminary, wrote a thesis on the Dark Day of May 19, 1780, in which he presented the following description of this unusual day based upon historical records he had gleaned after extensive research.

"Friday morning, May 19, the sunrise was seen in most sections of New England. The only exceptions were the far southwestern portions . . . where the darkness had already settled. A red sun began to climb into the heavens. Shortly after sunrise the quiet of the air was broken by a slight stirring of wind. . . . In the background the continual roar of thunder sounded in the ears of the residents. . . . From the southwest a dark cloud loomed threateningly, appearing at first to be a thundercloud. Then the wind changed rapidly around to the west and again back to the southwest, bringing the ominous darkness that approached steadily, swiftly, and covered every town and hamlet within a radius of two hundred miles.

"Any who at first thought that this was merely a cloud, were soon disillusioned, for as it approached, the color of the landscape changed and all objects appeared brassy. Even the trees and grass, instead of the usual bright green, took on a yellowish-brown coloration and then faded into the all-pervading darkness.

"This darkness struck terror to the hearts of many: some thought it to be the cessation of all light; others saw in it the sign of the Lord's coming; still others thought it to be a portent of a great unknown danger. It must have seemed strange indeed to see birds returning to their nests and chickens to their roosts. House after house began to light candles in order to carry on the ordinary processes of living, and some people gathered into the churches to receive counsel from their pastors.

"The darkness varied in intensity from place to place. When the sun rose highest in the heavens, the darkness was greater. After twelve or one o'clock, light came again to the farthest southwest section of New England. Three hours later, at three or four o'clock, the sun was again shining over most sections of New England. As the evening approached the darkness returned, and the night that followed was so dark that plain white paper could not be seen when placed in front of the eye. The wind arose shortly after midnight, dispersing the clouds, and the full moon could be seen.

"Accounts appeared in many papers, describing this darkness. Tracts were published explaining it as a sign of Christ's coming."—The Dark Day of May 19, 1780, pp. 4-7.

Said Ellen G. White of this phenomenon:

"May 19, 1780, stands in history as 'The Dark Day.' Since the time of Moses, no period of darkness of equal density, extent, and duration, has ever been recorded. The description of this event, as given by eye-witnesses, is but an echo of the words of the Lord, recorded by the prophet Joel, twenty-five hundred years previous to their fulfillment: 'The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come.'

"Christ had bidden His people watch for the signs of His advent, and rejoice as they should behold the tokens of their coming King. 'When these things begin to come to pass,' He said, 'then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh.' He pointed His followers to the budding trees of spring, and said: 'When they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.'"—The Great Controversy, pp. 308, 309.

One hundred seventy-five years have passed by since the first of the heavenly signs. One hundred twenty-two years have slipped away since the falling of the stars on November 13, 1833. Christ is no longer prevented from making His appearance because of unfulfilled prophecies of this character. Only an unfinished work separates us from eternity. (See Matt. 24:14.) How our hearts long for the appearance of the sign of the Son of man in the heavens and the coming of our blessed Redeemer. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus" (Rev. 22:20).

D. A. D.

Make Sure It's Genuine

The other day we received a letter from one of our church members in the Northwest. She says in effect: "I want to ask you about a man from Takoma Park. He has been sending me circular letters for a long time dealing with church matters. He says some pretty hard things about the ministry and the General Conference so I wrote to him inquiring if he was a Seventh-day Adventist minister in good standing. He replied that all printed material sent out was checked by such men as A (naming a college Bible teacher), B (a teacher at the Theological Seminary), and C (an editor at the publishing house). He went on to say that his wife is a Sabbath school teacher of many years experience. I cannot understand this, for some of his statements are so critical and abusive. Lately he has been encouraging the people to send him their tithes and offerings. Do you know this man?"

Yes, we know him. He is not a member of the Seventh-day Adventist Church. His claims of connection with our leaders are false. He speaks of his wife having been a Sabbath school teacher. If she ever was, she is not now teaching in any of our churches, and has not been for a long time. Many of the statements in this man's mimeographed letters are positively untrue. We would advise our people to have no fellowship with his unfruitful works of darkness. He is but one example of those who make it their business to cast discredit upon the work of God and to destroy the influence of the leadership.

There is no occasion to be misled in regard to circular material purporting to bring counsel to the church or to give information regarding its activities or leadership. If it is properly authorized, the name of the responsible committee, organization, or institution will be clearly indicated. If it is signed by an individual, his official relationship to the denomination will be stated. Lacking such positive identification, the material should be understood to carry with it no denominational sanction or approval of any kind. If it comes unwanted through the mails, it can be stopped by refusing it at the post office and asking that it be returned to the sender.

In this connection a statement from the messenger of God may be read with great profit:

"Satan hopes to involve the remnant people of God in the general ruin that is coming upon the earth. As the coming of Christ draws nigh, he will be more determined and decisive in his efforts to overthrow them. Men and women will arise professing to have some new light or some new revelation, whose tendency is to unsettle faith in the old landmarks. Their doctrines will not bear the test of God's word, yet souls will be deceived. False reports will be circulated, and some will be taken in this snare. They will believe these rumors, and in their turn will repeat them, and thus a link will be formed connecting them with the archdeceiver. This spirit will not always be manifested in an open defiance of the messages that God sends, but a settled unbelief is expressed in many ways. Every false statement that is made feeds and strengthens this unbelief, and through this means many souls will be balanced in the wrong direction."—Testimonies, vol. 5, pp. 295, 296. F. D. N.

The Doctrine of Eternal Torment Embarrasses Ministers

There is great confusion among the Christian churches today over the doctrine of eternal torment. While the ancient creed of the church on this unscriptural teaching has not been renounced, few ministers declaim on the rigors of the damned as their predecessors did.

Most members of the clergy apparently are embarrassed by this wholly pagan doctrine. How can they in one breath denounce the horror chambers of Buchenwald and in the next breath preach about a God who keeps his victims alive in order to continue such horrors upon their broken bodies throughout all eternity? Now that men have learned through Satanic experience how to prolong the agony of men by psychological tortures, modern preachers feel less inclined to picture God in the same role.

It seems there has been difficulty in the Church of Norway over this subject. Some clergy have refused to believe it, let alone to preach it. Only recently the doctrine of eternal punishment was under discussion by the bishops of this church.

While the bishops thought it unnecessary to repudiate this age-old teaching, they sought to soften its application by saying, "Let us admit on behalf of our church, that we have not succeeded in preaching as clearly and warmly as we should that the rigor of God always serves His love." While they feel compelled to acknowledge the historic existence of the doctrine of eternal torment, they did add these words: "This is the word of God . . . and in the light of these words we also have to see the severe words about punishment. Here, if anywhere, we are up against something which we cannot master with our wisdom."—Quoted in The Christian Century, March 9, 1955.

While the bishops of Norway were struggling with this question, the pope in Rome, admitting modern objections to the idea of endless punishment, had no compunction whatever in stating that "the immutability and eternity of the judgment of reprobation and of its fulfillment is beyond dispute." "God could," the pope admitted, "in the next life remit such a punishment; everything depends on his free will; but he never has granted it and never will do so."—Ibid.

From the immediate death of his child until the day of David's own death the king knew little peace either at home or abroad. The effects of his evil deed pursued him, and God took no course to hold back the evil influences that continued to surround him.

"Those who, by pointing to the example of David, try to lessen the guilt of their own sins, should learn from the Bible record that the way of transgression is hard. Though like David they should turn from their evil course, the results of sin, even in this life, will be found bitter and hard to bear."—Ibid., p. 724.

If, at the point of temptation, the tempted rather than seeking some excuse for their sin would visualize the consequences of it through long years to come and even after their passing from this life, how much more hesitant they would be to commit an act that would not only bring unhappiness to their own life but to many others because of the influence of that act.

"God intended the history of David's fall to serve as a warning that even those whom He has greatly blessed and favored are not to feel secure, and neglect watchfulness and prayer. And thus it has proved to those who in humility have sought to learn the lesson that God designed to teach. From generation to generation, thousands have thus been led to realize their own danger from the tempter's power. The fall of David, one so greatly honored by the Lord, has awakened in them distrust of self. They have felt that God alone could keep them by His power through faith. Knowing that in Him was their strength and safety, they have feared to take the first step on Satan's ground."—Ibid. F. L.

Weighing Our Motives

Not long ago sixty stewardship leaders representing twenty-one denominations gathered in Chicago for a conference. At this meeting they heard a Presbyterian, John Thompson Peters, assail false motivations sometimes used by churches to persuade people to contribute. He listed three examples: (1) "Beat Communism," (2) "Make the world safe from the atomic bomb," (3) "Preserve our institutions and the pride of our denomination." Casting aside all such appeals as being unworthy, Dr. Peters emphasized that gratitude should be the mainspring of Christian giving; as we sense what God has done for us, we should want to share the blessings with others.

It is doubtful that any general change will result from the warning sounded by this eminent cleric; the strong tide of slogan religion is flowing too swiftly to be checked by one or two good speeches. It is sad but true that for some professed Christians the slogan "Beat Communism" has more power to open purses than "Seek and Save That Which Is Lost."

And the danger of giving from unworthy motives is not restricted to non-Adventist churches. It also besets God's remnant people. There is an ever-present peril that all of us may at times give merely to be seen of men or simply to help reach a financial goal. We may forget that it is possible to give from either noble or base motives, and that our motives largely determine the value of our offerings in God's sight.

In discussing this problem, the Spirit of prophecy has written: "If his [God's] people were liberally to sustain his cause by their voluntary gifts, instead of resorting to unchristian and unhallowed methods to fill the treasury, God would be honored, and many more souls would be won to Christ."

"The plan of Moses to raise means for the building of the tabernacle was highly successful. No urging was necessary. Nor did he employ any of the devices to which churches in our day so often resort. He made no grand feast. He did not invite the people to scenes of gayety, dancing, and general amusement; neither did he institute lotteries, or anything of this profane order, to obtain means to erect the tabernacle for God. The Lord directed Moses to invite the children of Israel to bring their offerings. He was to accept gifts from every one that gave willingly, from his heart."—Patriarchs and Prophets, p. 529.

As of old, the cause of God today needs funds with which to advance. A greater need, however, is for each member to so fully share Christ's love for sinners that no other motivation for giving would ever be needed. "Thus it was in the early church; and when in the church of to-day it is seen that by the power of the Spirit the members have taken their affections from the things of the world, and that they are willing to make sacrifices in order that their fellow-men may hear the gospel, the truths proclaimed will have a powerful influence upon the hearers."—The Acts of the Apostles, p. 71.

As God's remnant people, should we not set before the world the purest example of love-prompted giving? Away, then, with all that would reduce church giving to the level of a commercial enterprise! Jesus gave because He loved, and when He dwells within our hearts we will do likewise.

K. H. W.

Certain dates have significant associations. Our Sabbath schools this week will recall May 19, 1780, and the words of Jesus relating to His return to earth. "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars" (Luke 21:25). He said. He also specified a time for these things: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light" (Matt. 24:29).

When the 1260 years of ecclesiastical domination (A.D. 538-1798) were drawing to a close, liberty began to dawn. Then came some of the signs in 1780—the dark day of May 19 and the Egyptian-dark night that followed—supernatural signs, emanating from the Creator who made the heavenly bodies "for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years" (Gen. 1:14; see comment in The SDA Bible Commentary, vol. 1, p. 212).

What wonders have happened in our world since 1780! The spread of freedom, the inventions that gave men unprecedented powers for good and, alas, for evil, the acceleration of every form of knowledge calculated to bring men ultimately face to face with God.

And what amazing things have occurred in God's work! From a little handful of believers in 1844 the Advent family has grown to more than one million members found almost everywhere throughout the earth. We have hospitals, presses, schools, colleges, literature, teaching aids, Bible lessons on every subject, beyond the dreams of our pioneers.

Among the greatest of our endeavors to encourage the study of the Holy Word is the appearance of The SDA Bible Commentary, a veritable mine of truth for all to explore, a treasure some of us never expected to possess.

What a unifying influence this should be! What devotional, inspirational, doctrinal, prophetic, theological lore is here available to every member. Not the last word on everything, of course, but where we know little, these volumes keep us within safe bounds; and where there is more to know, they set us on the right road.

Every teacher and officer, and every layman with a desire for knowledge should have these volumes. As the greatest single publishing project undertaken by the Advent Movement, they cannot fail to exert a strong bond of safe doctrinal teaching, spiritual inspiration, and deeper and better Bible study.

If these books are used in our daily study and class teaching of the Sabbath school lesson, in conjunction with Spirit of prophecy comments, the greatest revival ever to bless this people might well ensue. There will be no dark day spiritually to those following this plan.

H. W. LOWE

Freedom and Happiness for Youth

By Lucia Martone

"We sometimes hear the questions: Am I never to do as I please? Am I never to have my own way? Am I always to be restrained? Can I never act in accordance with my inclinations?"—Messages to Young People, p. 68.

Are you like many young people who, when they reach a certain age, begin to feel independent and resent being told what they can and cannot do? Some are eager to grow up quickly so that they can be "free." Sometimes people get married while they are too young, thinking they will then be free. Sometimes they leave home, as did the prodigal son.

We can liken young people to choice plants. At a certain stage in their development they begin sending out shoots in all directions and, without proper attention, would run wild, bearing little fruit and gradually becoming almost worthless. With severe pruning, however, they develop into beautiful plants, producing large, delicious fruit.

The so-called freedom that is so greatly sought by young people is actually a mirage. It fades as we seem about to grasp it. The transformation from being a child to becoming an adult brings many responsibilities and many cares of which young people know little, and with which they are not prepared to cope.

Ellen G. White has written that our "natural inclinations have been perverted. . . . Satan . . . works continually to destroy the divine image in man."—Ibid. He can do this best during childhood and youth. Thus, like plants, if youth are not restrained and controlled in their words and actions they will bear evil fruit, whereas, with proper restraint and control, they may grow into fine and useful men and women—beautiful in the sight of God.

God made us and redeemed us. We belong to Him physically, mentally, and morally. Our talents belong to Him—our time, our influence, our reason, our affection, and our conscience. They are to be used only in harmony with His will—not for the world, which is at enmity with God.

Our flesh belongs to God—every bone and every muscle. We are not to neglect or abuse a single organ, but should cooperate with God by keeping our bodies in the very best possible condition of health so that the Holy Spirit may dwell in us, molding our physical and spiritual powers according to His will. Therefore we will be careful of what we eat, of what we drink, and of what we wear. We also will be careful of what we say and how we say it, as well as of what we do and how we do it—seeking God's glory and not our own.

Our minds belong to God and must be stored with pure principles and high and holy ideals. God's truths, as revealed in His Word, should be cherished, and their meditation should be our delight. As the roots of plants feed upon the elements in the earth in order to produce pure and delicious fruit, so our minds must feed on God's Word to produce pure and true Christian characters.

Our morals belong to God. If our minds are consecrated to Him, this will be no problem. We will love the things that please Him. As the lily looks to the sun and reflects its brightness, so we will reflect God's image if we keep our thoughts on Him. Purity of word and deed is a prime requisite for entering our heavenly home. Just as surely as we clean our houses of all dust and dirt, just so surely will God cleanse this earth of all that defiles. While engaged in cleaning of any kind, whether houses, rooms, clothes, dishes, or otherwise, let us remember these soul temples of ours. How much more important that they be clean!

It is in Christ, our Saviour, that we obtain true freedom and happiness. When we put our will on the side of Christ, we have peace, and with peace comes happiness. When we belong to God we have the assurance of His care and have freedom from fear. When we confess our sins with true repentance, we are forgiven and receive freedom from the shackles of sin.

May nothing come between us and our Saviour! If anything—business or pleasure—is causing us to lose our love for the Saviour, let us give it up and say, "'Here I am, Saviour; what wilt Thou have me to do?' He will receive you graciously, and love you freely. He will abundantly pardon; for He is merciful and long-suffering, not willing that any should perish."—Ibid., p. 70.

All that we have or are belongs to God. It is a great privilege to be His child, and we should not feel that it is a sacrifice to serve Him. Whatever our ambitions or heart's desire may be, let us lay it at the feet of Jesus, and claim His promise, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matt. 6:33).

Black Friday—1780

By D. A. Delafield

How would you feel if you got out of bed tomorrow morning, dressed, ate your breakfast, hurried off to school while the sun was shining overhead, and then suddenly about ten o'clock found yourself in darkness so deep that you could scarcely see the book in front of your face? Well, believe it or not, that is exactly what happened in New England on May 19, 1780. The day is known in history as the Black Friday of New England because of the darkness that came.

A feeling of alarm took possession of the people. Thomas Gage, author of the book, History of Rowley, Massachusetts, who probably was an eyewitness of the event, wrote:

"By ten o'clock A.M., the darkness was such as to occasion the farmers to leave their work in the field, and retire to their dwellings; fowls went to their roosts, and before noon, light became necessary to the transaction of business within doors; the darkness continued through the day; and the night till near morning was as unusually dark as the day."—Page 423.

A man by the name of Dr. William Gordon never forgot that remarkable night and wrote about it later. It was eight o'clock, and he was returning to his home from a visit. He could see the candles burning in the houses, but everything looked different. He could not see the road in front of him, but simply kept his eye on the candle that he carried, and walked in the light from one house to the next. The darkness became so intense, however, that he had to go back to the last house and get a lantern.

REVIEW AND HERALD

In front of him was a company of people riding horseback. The horses could not see to direct themselves. The poor animals were frightened. They did not know where to put their feet down on the ground. They acted like beasts near the edge of a precipice about to step over and plunge into darkness.

One young man who witnessed that terrible dark day said, "My father and mother, who were pious, thought the day of judgment was near. They sat up that night, during the latter part of which they said the darkness disappeared . . . but the moon, which was at its full, had the appearance of blood."—Milo Bostwick letter from Camden, N.J., March 3, 1848.

This event took place more than 175 years ago. Did you know, juniors, that this Black Friday of 1780 and the dark night that followed when the moon did not give her light was a fulfillment of one of Jesus' prophecies?

Long ago when our Lord was here on earth, His disciples asked Him the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Among other signs that would appear, Jesus said, "The sun [shall] be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light" (Matt. 24:29). He also said that "the stars shall fall from heaven." These events, Jesus indicated, would take place "after the tribulation of those days," referring to the long period of persecution during the Dark Ages. And the events came just in the order in which Jesus said they would.

In the book of Revelation, John prophesied that the sun would become "black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon . . . as blood" (Rev. 6:12). That's just the way it looked on that memorable night. This was the first of the heavenly signs that Jesus said would usher in the great and final day of judgment. Next week we want to tell you about the falling of the stars.

Yes, Jesus is coming again in the clouds of heaven, and these events are signs of His coming. Remember, another sign that Jesus is coming soon is the darkness in men's hearts. This is worse by far than the Dark Day of May 19, 1780. Are we preparing to meet Jesus by letting the Light of life shine out of our lives? This is the way to dispel the darkness of our world.

"Skip It!"

By R. J. Schneider

"Oh, skip it!"

This snappish phrase often finds use in moments when teen-agers and their parents are being a great trial to one another. It sets up a kind of no man's land after eager youth and prudent age have exchanged volleys, both sides retiring with the exasperated feeling that an impasse has been reached. It is an expression usually employed when tempers are short, when either or both parties lack necessary facts, or when injustice, real or imaginary, is rankling.

Most of us would agree that the solution to such a situation is compounded of a patient combination of three inspired biddings: Parents, "do not provoke your children to anger," "Children, obey your parents in the Lord," and "Come now, let us reason together." But often the case before us seems like a baffling jigsaw puzzle—all the necessary pieces are lying in plain sight, but how are we going to fit them together to make sense?

Perhaps the petulant phrase itself offers the clue. Why not "skip it" for a few moments or longer, until hunger, weariness, or irritation are lessened? Then, acting calmly and with the confident affection we normally feel for each other, thresh out the thorny matter and discover a course of action that will be mutually agreeable.

The danger in the touchy phrase lies in leaving it hanging—a naked sword between parents and youth that prevents any cordial attempt to arbitrate the misunderstanding. It is then, usually, that both set foot on the rocky road to "learning the hard way."

An old poem counsels, "Rest if you must, but don't you quit," a bit of advice that is singularly appropriate during arbitrations of disagreements, large and small. "Come now, let us reason together" and you will find that in "quietness and in trust shall be your strength"—the strength of true happiness and understanding between parents and young people to whom the will of God is precious.

The world report for our Sabbath schools for June 30, 1956, showed that we raised our 107th million dollars for missions in eight weeks and four days ending June 3.

The way we calculate the time is to divide the total Sabbath school offerings for the quarter by the number of days in the quarter; this gives us the amount per day the Sabbath school offerings averaged for the quarter. We can then find how many days were required to make up the million dollars.

During the first quarter of 1956 our Sabbath school offerings averaged $15,806.91 per day, and during the second quarter $16,534.64 per day. That is about as much as we gave during the whole year of 1951.

Of course, we like to compare the eight weeks and four days that it took us to raise the 107th million dollars with the twenty-five years it took us to raise the first million dollars. But we forget that inflation has played tricks with our dollar. Today's dollar would buy only 51 cents worth of goods in 1935, and only 37 cents worth of goods in 1915. So it would have taken only eight or nine years to gather the first million dollars if they were 1955 dollars, and it would have taken 25 weeks and 5 days to gather our last million dollars if they had been the kind of dollars given in preinflation times.

It is interesting to know that while we give our comfortable dollars for Sabbath school offerings, in many mission fields they are giving sweet potatoes, fruit, eggs, and garden produce. But God has a way of using everything, and it is not hard to translate pounds, cruzeiros, pesos, or rupees, into dollars.

We do rejoice that we can have a part in these wonderful offerings, and we expect with your enthusiasm and help to raise seven million dollars in 1956. That means that we hope to pass the 111th million-dollar mark by the end of the year.

Think dollars, talk dollars, give dollars for missions through your Sabbath school offerings.

"This matter of giving is not left to impulse. God has given us definite instruction in regard to it. He has specified tithes and offerings as the measure of our obligation. And He desires us to give regularly and systematically. Paul wrote to the church at Corinth, 'Concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him.' Let each regularly examine his income, which is all a blessing from God, and set apart the tithe as a separate fund, to be sacredly the Lord's. This fund should not in any case be devoted to any other use; it is to be devoted solely to support the ministry of the gospel. After the tithe is set apart, let gifts and offerings be apportioned, 'as God hath prospered you.'"—Ellen G. White, The Review and Herald, May 9, 1893.

ERIC B. HARE

Seven Reasons Why Christ Must Return

By RICHARD D. FEARING

Many reasons might be given why Jesus must return to this earth. We will briefly discuss seven of the most prominent ones.

1. Christ must return to take possession of this world. The moment Adam and Eve sinned this world became Satan's dominion, and in the years before the Flood man became so godless that "every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually" (Gen. 6:5).

When Christ died on the cross and rose the third day, it assured the eventual destruction of Satan and sin. The anxiety of heavenly angels and the inhabitants of sinless worlds gave place to joy because of Jesus' victory over death and the grave.

But although these groups could rejoice with the thought of final victory, the inhabitants of earth must fear the redoubled efforts of the deceiver to drag every possible soul to eternal destruction (Rev. 12:12). Previous to this, Satan had attended heavenly councils as a representative of this earth (Job 1:6, 7; 2:1, 2), but now he was excluded, and would make unprecedented attempts to enslave the members of the earthly family. Sin would develop so fully that created beings everywhere could see the lengths to which Satan would go in his attempt to usurp the authority of the Most High (Isa. 14:14).

Christ must come to claim the earth and its inhabitants that He bought with His blood.

2. Christ must return to destroy the marks of sin. After the creation of the world in six days God looked about and saw that everything was very good (Gen. 1:31). But after sin entered, even the earth itself began to deteriorate. We have marked evidence today of the scars that evil has etched on the world's face—frightful chasms, volcanoes, deserts, arctic wastes, et cetera. These blights on the world must be erased before it will be as it was in the beginning. "The first dominion" (Micah 4:8) will be restored by Christ, who is called the "tower of the flock."

What will the world be like then? The book of Isaiah describes it as "a new earth"—a place where one can build and keep his own home and have vineyards of plenty, and where even once-ferocious animals will be tame (Isa. 65:17, 21-25). Today's beauty spots will be magnified and multiplied beyond imagination. How we long for the return of Christ, which will move us one step nearer the day when the earth itself shall be restored to its original beauty.

3. Christ must return to destroy sin and bring peace. Have you ever watched large pieces of lead placed in a melting pot, and as the fire increased in intensity seen them slowly break up and become a silvery mass of liquid? Only a very hot fire can do this. The symbol of a refiner's fire is used to describe the effect of Christ's coming on the people of this earth (Mal. 3:2).

To those who have conquered sin through faith in Him as their Saviour, it will be a glorious day (Heb. 9:28). To those who have been too plified that because of his faith he would have a place in Paradise.

This man is sleeping with all the other righteous dead (1 Thess. 4:16). If necessary, Christ would come back to this world just to receive this thief who repented of his wicked deeds. It is a principle of heaven that there is rejoicing even over the few that accept salvation (Luke 15:7). The blessing of Christ pronounced upon this eleventh-hour repentant sinner gives hope to millions who need a Saviour.

5. Christ must return to fulfill prophecy. Most of the prophecies concerning the time of the end have been fulfilled. The universal kingdoms have gone. They have been divided (Daniel 2). Inventions of the last one hundred years have reached phenomenal proportions (Dan. 12:4). The great religious apostasy of the Dark Ages, the Dark Day of 1780, the shower of stars in 1833—all have passed into the records of history (Matt. 24:29-34). The people who were to "see all these things" were to know that Jesus' coming was near, "even at the doors."

The capsheaf of all prophecy will be the literal return of the Lord Jesus. How soon will it be? We do not know, but we are admonished to be ready now lest this event come as a surprise (Matt. 24:44).

6. Christ must return to silence the skeptics. Abroad in the world today is the false belief that the Lord Jesus will not come again in person—that He will only exist in spirit form, and that we are living in His presence now. But what do the Holy Scriptures say? First, individuals or movements holding such views are actually a sign of the last days and of the imminent return of the Saviour (2 Peter 3:3, 4). Second, to live in the presence of Christ can only be "at his coming" (1 Thess. 2:19).

Think of a hot, humid evening. From the west come dark thunderclouds. Flashes of lightning herald the storm's approach. The sky and earth are entirely illuminated by the light. Quickly the mind goes to the illustration that Christ gave His disciples concerning His literal return (Matt. 24:27). Can one have any doubt after spending a few minutes in an electrical storm that upon the return of Jesus "every eye shall see him" (Rev. 1:7)? How tragic it will be for those who have chosen not to

We All Look Forward

By MARY GUSTAFSON

We all look forward against the day
When Christ and His angels wing
Down to the waiting who watch and pray
And hope for their rightful King.

We know He is coming, it can't be long,
For the clock tolls the midnight hour,
The old earth trembles, the ocean roars
At a word of Christ's wonderful power.

We all look forward and soon, now soon,
We will ride where the chariots are,
Past moon and sun and the planets,
Up to the farthest star

Where heaven lies, and the golden street,
Where the tree of life will hold
Solace for all who have sorrowed here,
As eternities unfold.

busy to bother with a Saviour or who have rejected His proffered love, it will be an indescribable time of terror (Rev. 6:14-17). After this separation has taken place, the world will be at peace and will only await the close of the millennium to bring a total end to sin (Nahum 1:9).

4. Christ must return to fulfill the promise made to the repentant thief on the cross. At first both of the thieves that were hanging near Christ reviled Him. But one changed his mind. He saw in Christ a divine quality that he had never seen before. He had seen and heard the Master before; now he really believed. He asked Jesus to remember him when He came into His kingdom. Jesus re-believe that He would return, and have contented themselves with the thought that this world would stand forever!

7. Christ must return to reward faith in the resurrection. Through the ages millions have died in peace, confident of a future life with their Saviour. In sleep there is no consciousness of the passing of time, and the same condition exists in death. When Abraham and David are raised they will not sense that they have been in the grave longer than the dying thief or a nineteenth-century Christian.

What a tremendous day of triumph it will be for those who have died waiting for Christ, and for those who are yet alive when He returns (Isa. 25:8, 9)! For some, the eternal life that they had begun through faith in Christ was interrupted by death and the grave. Now they are reunited with their Saviour, clothed with immortality, never to die again (1 Cor. 15:53).

Seven reasons have been given why Jesus must come again in person to this earth if the Bible is to be proved true, if lasting peace is to be brought to the world, and if the hope of Christians in all ages is to be fulfilled.

Dear friend, do not spend too many hours in thoughts concerning mundane affairs. All too quickly this earth shall pass away. Rest your faith on the solid facts of Scripture pertaining to the soon coming of your Saviour and greatest Friend. Make careful and earnest preparation for this event that will bring an end, not just to an era or an age, but to all worldly affairs.

the earth was misunderstood. In all this He fulfilled Isaiah's prophecy. Even His most intimate friends failed to support Him with sympathy and encouragement as He worked out man's salvation. He trod the wine press alone.

In order that men might accept Him as their Saviour, Jesus endeavored to establish His divinity. Thousands would have been willing to accept Him as a great teacher or a great prophet, but when He declared His divinity, when He set forth the fact that He was the Son of God, those who were there were ready to stone Him. Except for divine intervention He would have lost His life at Nazareth. He lost His popularity by the Sea of Galilee when He said, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you" (John 6:53). And He was crucified after declaring His divinity before Caiaphas.

In all this Jesus walked alone. Yet never man craved companionship as did our Lord. He chose twelve men that they might be His companions. Near the end of His ministry He said to His disciples: "Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me" (Luke 22:28, 29). But even then they did not understand that Jesus' kingdom was spiritual and not temporal. Even among His disciples Jesus was alone as He was alone in the wilderness.

Why did the Spirit drive Jesus into the wilderness to be tempted? Why was not Jerusalem, the Holy City, the scene of the great conflict? Because some temptations are keenest when met in solitude. David did not fall into sin when he was fighting the Lord's battles, but when he was at home.

It is easier to lay aside the sin that doth so easily beset us when we are in the midst of some profitable activity rather than when we are inactive and alone with our thoughts. Sin must first be conceived in the mind. It is our thoughts that hurt us, and we are more likely to yield to temptation when we are alone, away from those who know us.

According to Paul the Christian's armor is needed after the foe is apparently vanquished. He says, "That ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand." How many have fought a good fight on the field of battle, only to let down afterward and be overcome by sin. After they had "done all" they failed "to stand."

Martineau said concerning temptation: "We must be solitary when we are tempted. The management of the

The Temptation of Jesus—2

"Into the Wilderness"

By Dallas Youngs

"And immediately the spirit driveth him into the wilderness. And he was there in the wilderness forty days" (Mark 1:12, 13).

Where is the wilderness in which Christ was tempted and where He fasted forty days? Many commentators believe it was in the area of the Dead Sea, near the presumed location of the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, which were destroyed by fire and brimstone in Lot's time.

"The place was a desert, waste, barren, shelterless, overhead the hot sun, underfoot the burning sand or blistering rock. No outbranching trees make a cool restful shade; no spring upbursting with a song of gladness came to relieve the thirst; no flowers bloomed, pleasing the eye with colour and the nostrils with fragrance: all was drear desert."—A. M. FAIRBAIRN.

Monks and hermits in all ages have gone to the desert to escape temptation, but Jesus went into the wilderness to meet it. He would meet the adversary alone. He would fight without the benefit of human aid or sympathy. He would fulfill Isaiah's prophecy: "I have trodden the winepress alone" (Isa. 63:3).

In carrying out the plan of salvation Jesus did indeed tread the wine press alone. This is suggested in Luke 9:18, when Jesus was praying: "And it came to pass, as he was alone praying, his disciples were with him." The twelve disciples were physically present with Jesus; yet He is said to be "alone." They failed to understand the purpose for which He had come to the earth. They looked forward to a temporal kingdom in which Israel would be elevated above the other nations, in which the hated Roman yoke would be thrown off; in which the disciples would occupy important government posts, in which the Jews would be the head and not the tail. They could not conceive that Jesus would suffer death at the hands of His own people.

On one occasion when Jesus told them of His coming decease at Jerusalem, Peter rebuked Him: "Be it far from thee, Lord." But Jesus said: "Get thee behind me, Satan." Peter was speaking the words of Satan.

From the beginning of His ministry Jesus was misunderstood. The purpose for which He had come to

Awake

By BERTHA MORRIS WILKINS

Awake, awake,
Rejoice and sing;
Our Saviour comes,
Heaven's glorious King.

Put on His garment,
Beautiful, free,
Graciously offered
To you and to me.

Time is short,
War clouds lower,
Let it be known
This is the hour.

Sabbath School Lesson Help

By HARRY W. LOWE, General Conference Field Secretary

FOR SABBATH, FEBRUARY 13, 1960

Signs in the Heavens

[This Lesson Help is a running comment on the lesson presented in the Sabbath School Quarterly and should be read in connection with it.]

THE celestial lights were created to divide night from day, and also to "be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years" (Gen. 1:14). "These celestial bodies marked special acts of God's favor or displeasure as in Joshua's (Joshua 10:12, 13) and Hezekiah's times (2 Kings 20:11), and on the crucifixion day (Matt. 27:45). The stars also served as one of the signs of Christ's second coming (Matt. 24:29)."—The SDA Bible Commentary, on Gen. 1:14.

1. Some Old Testament Prophecies

JOEL 3:15. "The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining." "The powers of heaven are the sun, moon, and stars. . . . The powers of heaven will be shaken at the voice of God. Then the sun, moon, and stars will be moved out of their places."—Early Writings, p. 41.

An earthquake and a darkened sun are recorded at the opening of the sixth seal, in Revelation 6:12. This is undoubtedly one of the signs foretold by Jesus (Luke 21:25), and since the Second Advent transpires under this sixth seal, we can see in Revelation 6:12-17 that today we stand between the events of verses 13 and 14. In view of the fact that John the revelator and our Lord both speak of signs in the heavens as preceding the Second Advent, we feel justified in concluding that the words of Joel may be thought of as a description of the same event. Further reading: The Great Controversy, pages 636, 637.

JOEL 2:30, 31, R.S.V. "I will give portents in the heavens and on the earth, blood and fire and columns of smoke. The sun shall be turned to darkness, and the moon to blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord comes."

God does not bring great events to pass without providing divine portents. He gave warning of the Deluge (Gen. 6:7), and the prophets foretold every impending disaster, such as the captivities of the Jews. Today we see in contemporary events, and in special signs, the fulfillment of our Lord's prophetic warnings of the end.

"We need now to take heed to ourselves. Warnings have been given. Can we not see the fulfillment of the predictions made by Christ and recorded in the twenty-first chapter of Luke? How many are studying the words of Christ?"—Testimonies, vol. 9, p. 268.

2. Some New Testament Forecasts

LUKE 21:25, 26, R.S.V. "'And there will be signs in sun and moon and stars, and upon the earth distress of nations in perplexity at the roaring of the sea and the waves, men fainting with fear and with foreboding of what is coming on the world; for the powers of the heavens will be shaken.'"

This scene under the seventh plague reveals disturbances among the heavenly bodies and also in the forces of nature. The times and events are so ominous that men faint with fear and eventually choose death, hoping thus to escape facing judgment at the hands of "him that sitteth on the throne." The great disturbance of earthly and heavenly powers foreshadows "the great day of his wrath" (see Rev. 6:13-17).

God has shaken the world in various ways and at different times. There comes an end to the warnings He will give, and here we see the last of the great disturbances prior to the actual appearance of our Lord at His second advent.

REVELATION 6:12. "And the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood." The dark day of May 19, 1780, was a striking fulfillment of this prophecy. It is not necessary, however, to limit signs to one such opening event, for doubtless between 1780 and the Lord's appearance many supernatural events will be found to have impressed men with forebodings of calamity. The falling stars of 1833 were another celestial phenomenon that fulfilled Revelation 6:13, and reminded men that God gives warnings, that men might prepare before He acts in final judgment.

3. Prophecy and the Testimony of History

MATTHEW 24:29. "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened." Compare Mark 13:24. "Of those days" applies to the 1260 years (Dan. 7:25), which were to be "shortened" (Matt. 24:22). The 1260-year period extended from A.D. 538 to A.D. 1798. The shortening of this time meant a slackening of persecution, else "there should no flesh be saved." By 1773 there was practically a cessation of persecution, and in the remaining 25 years there occurred the dark day of May 19, 1780. Thus it was in "those [1260] days" and "after the tribulation."

MARK 13:24. "In those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light."

The moon withheld its light by some supernatural means the night following the above-mentioned dark day. The Egyptian darkness of this day and night is commented on in The Great Controversy, page 308: "Since the time of Moses, no period of darkness of equal density, extent, and duration, has ever been recorded."

LUKE 21:25. "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars." The parallel passage in Matthew 24:29 says: "The stars shall fall from heaven." There is no guidance for man in the stars, as astrology is sometimes made to teach, except insofar as God uses these inanimate objects to warn mankind. "The stars of heaven are under God's control. He fills them with light. He guides and directs their movements."—Gospel Workers, p. 14. Consequently the stars do not fall without divine permission. The meteoric shower of November 13, 1833, fulfilled the prophecy of the Gospels. John saw a pictorial fulfillment when "the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs" (Rev. 6:13).

4. "Sursum Corda!"

LUKE 21:28. "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." This chapter has been called "the most devastating catalogue of crisis and convulsion, of formidable, ruthless forces playing havoc with good men's dreams. These words of Jesus are full of the crash and thunder of the storm—nation rising against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; earthquakes, famines, pestilences, fearful sights and signs from heaven; persecutions, inquisitions, racial hatreds, martyrdoms; the whole world gone mad, . . . then, said Jesus, Look up! Lift up your heads!"—JAMES S. STEWART, The Strong Name, pp. 3, 4.

MARK 13:29. "When ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors." "The Lord has given us warning of the events about to take place. Light is shining from His word."—Testimonies, vol. 5, p. 99. "These momentous events are nigh at hand, yet many who profess to believe the truth are asleep."—Ibid., p. 15. To "see" these signs is to know their meaning, and to know what is coming is to prepare, if we are wise.

LUKE 21:34. "Take heed to yourselves." The Saviour is here warning against "surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." Surfeiting implies too much of anything, good or bad. Can we imagine Christ's waiting servants engaging in endless parties, not necessarily bad in themselves? In an excess of activities to benefit self or to maintain social prestige? The common life of the world around is pictured as "dissipation and drunkenness and cares of this life" (R.S.V.), but the church is warned against them as though tempted to lower standards by such things.

MATTHEW 24:42. "Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." This is practically a whole parable (Mark 13:34-37) condensed into the word "watch." See also Matthew 24:43, 44, 45-51; 25:1-13, 14-30, 31-46.

• EDITORIALS •

The Dark Day

Today marks the 180th anniversary of the Dark Day of May 19, 1780. "Since the time of Moses, no period of darkness of equal density, extent, and duration, has ever been recorded."—The Great Controversy, p. 308.

Adventist students of Bible prophecy recognize this Dark Day as a fulfillment of Christ's prediction: "In those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened" (Mark 13:24). It was a sign that the final acts in the great controversy between Christ and Satan were about to take place. It called attention to the judgment hour, soon to begin. It announced that ere long Jesus would appear in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, to take His people to their heavenly home.

The Dark Day had precisely the effect that God intended it should have. Hearts were solemnized. Attention was given to spiritual matters. Prophecy was studied. Souls were searched. Prayers of repentance were offered.

A few years later, on November 13, 1833, a great meteoric shower took place in fulfillment of Christ's words: "And the stars of heaven shall fall" (Mark 13:25).

As the book of Revelation was studied, it was seen that these signs in space indicated that the sixth seal was being opened (see Rev. 6:12, 13). The next great event would be the coming of Christ (verses 14-17).

For more than a century the Adventist Church has been preaching the threefold message of Revelation 14, a message custom designed by God to prepare the world for the return of Jesus. As a result, today the Advent hope burns brightly in hearts all over the world.

The Dark Day 180 years ago was one of the first signs of Christ's return; but it was far from the last. Today multiplied signs in the physical world, the social world, the religious world, the scientific world, the political world, and the business world add their overwhelming testimony, proclaiming, "Jesus is coming soon!"

"When ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors" (Matt. 24:33). K. H. W.

Our Relationship to National Council—2

Radically Different Views Make Union Impossible

[Last week we referred to an editorial in the January 28 issue of the REVIEW in which we stated that the Adventist Church does not hold membership in the National Council of Churches. We went on to say that some persons, with obviously critical intent, had charged that we had deceived the trusting membership of the denomination in writing as we did in January. Their critical letters were of the circular kind—sent to many others, as well as to the editor. This led some of our good subscribers to write, asking for the straight of the matter. That is why we made the further statement last week, accompanying it with a photographic reproduction of a letter we had received from the National Council that fully supported the statements we had earlier made. At times it is necessary to speak out lest everyone be confused and the faith of some be weakened.

This week we wish to begin a brief series of editorials explaining why our doctrinal beliefs make it quite impossible for us to belong to the National Council of Churches, or to any similar organization, such as the World Council. This is a reprint of the series we wrote early in 1951 at the time the National Council was created. We are reprinting it because we believe that thus we may provide the clearest kind of proof that now, in 1960, we are taking the same position that we took when the National Council was set up. As stated in 1951 the series was originally written in response to a question asked of us at the time by one of the delegates to the organizing session in Cleveland: "Why don't you Seventh-day Adventist folk belong to the Council?" We, of course, had to answer the delegate briefly, but here is the answer as we spelled it out more in detail for the record in the REVIEW of January 11, 1951, and immediately succeeding issues.]

At the very outset we wish to make plain and emphatic that our not joining is in no degree to be explained on the grounds offered by certain fundamentalist groups who have repeatedly charged that the Federal Council of Churches, which is the core of the new National Council, is Socialistic, even Communistic, in its trends and objectives. We believe that that kind of charge does no credit to the cause of fundamentalism. Again, our failure to join the National Council is not because we think that the Protestant leaders who created it are evil men with a sinister, long-range plan to dominate the religious world and drive out all who differ with them. We believe that those who created the National Council are sincere men who honestly believe that they are best serving the cause of God by uniting their endeavors.

We make this declaration without mental reservation and without any fear that we are weakening in advance the reasons we now offer as to why we do not belong to the National Council. We need never question the sincerity of others' motives in order to prove the sincerity of ours. We need never to insist that the conduct of others is evil in order to prove that ours is good. A mood of suspicion and evil imputation can serve only to erect an insuperable barrier between us and those whom we believe God intends us to reach with a special message for these days.

Amos Provides the Answer

Yes, we can be clear in our belief that these Protestant leaders are sincere, while at the same time we believe that sincerity on our part absolutely prevents us from joining with them in the National Council of Churches. And why? The answer is found in the scriptural inquiry, "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" (Amos 3:3). Though the National Council is not an organic union of the various Protestant bodies into one great body, it is in spirit, in actuality, a very real union. Indeed, only to the degree that there is union of endeavor, of plan, and purpose and viewpoint, can there be any justification for the National Council.

But if there is to be this unity of spirit and purpose and viewpoint, there must be a very large area of agreement in belief. After all, it is their beliefs that make men what they are in any organization, whether it be religious, political, or otherwise. It is from beliefs that viewpoints are formed. It is from beliefs that definite courses of action are set out upon. It is from beliefs that crusades spring. And it is from beliefs that sacrificial liberality, so vital to a religious body, comes forth.

Now, Seventh-day Adventists do not know how to engage in any undertaking in the religious realm except in a wholehearted, vigorous, crusading way. The reason for this is our beliefs. We do have beliefs, very real and parent at this age level. It is somewhat self-evident that a rapid physical expansion program will leave the adolescent in sessions of emotional stress and strain. The child's nervous network undergoes rapid change, readying him for adulthood. While nature has separated the child from his mother by physical birth, God designed another separation, an emotional weaning from the parent. Nature demands that this separation take place, this cutting from mother's apron strings.

So marked is this period of separation that the adolescent casts about for new personalities upon which to settle his affections. Thus teachers, sports heroes, Hollywood figures, et cetera, may become the adolescent's temporary idols. A wise parent will seek at this juncture to fasten the youth's affections upon the fundamentals of Christian stability, in which there is no variableness or crashing disappointment.

Third, there are psychological changes. Perhaps even greater than a youth's physical and emotional changes are the psychological ones. During this transition period a youth stands between two amazing worlds. He sees before him glimpses of life's realities and its bold pattern. Often for the first time he sees in clearer concepts sickness, poverty, the astonishment of death, injustice, et cetera. He sees before him visions of professions, careers, and marriage. Often for the first time he sees an amazing world of glory and glitter as it swirls about him.

These twilight glimpses into the adult world have an amazing affect upon an adolescent, causing him to waver between an acceptance or a rejection of life's fundamentals. Behind him lie the calm hours of childhood, play, and romping. Now he senses that this world is passing—a world of childish fantasies, closeness; a world of dolls, toys, Teddy bears, and a thousand such things.

During this transition period a child moves back and forth between childishness and adulthood in his whims and perceptions. So marked is this period of development with variableness, erratic behavior, instability, that many parents, teachers, preachers, throw up their hands in complete bafflement. We believe the wise parent will recognize this transition period and will give guidance and assurance to the youth before him.

An adult basically dwells within the confines of "fixed" ideas, "fixed" morals, "fixed" standards. A child has as yet no such concepts and must be judged, helped, and guided according to his limited horizons.

It is during this transition period of adolescence that the mind undergoes marked changes. A whole world of fancy and make-believe sweeps across his adolescent mind. He becomes transfixed by such things as glitter, color, speed, flash, thrills. Adventure creeps into his very soul and blood stream. He talks one day about being President of the United States, while the next day he concerns himself with trading marbles. He boasts one day of capturing nations, yet in the same day is willing to settle for capturing squirrels. He talks authoritatively about love, but hates the opposite sex. He lingers for hours over a book, hardly aware that he is in class.

It is during this period of adolescence that the youth often places such a high regard upon the valueless, and such low regard upon the valuable. All of this is due, in part, to the fact that the adolescent is moving from childhood, carefree and pampered, into the sober facts of life, in which he has yet little experience.

I believe many strained relationships in Adventist homes with juniors and young people could be rectified if parents could re-examine some of
(Continued on page 23)

Signs of His Coming

By Arthur S. Maxwell

Looking far into the future, Jesus told His disciples about a fearful time of trouble that would come upon all who loved Him.

As the days of sorrow and suffering would slowly pass, deceivers would claim to be Christ come back from heaven. So weary would the people be, so eager for the trouble to end, that many would be led astray.

False christs and false prophets would arise showing "great signs and wonders." But, said Jesus, don't follow them.

They were to watch for certain great happenings, each one so big and important that no deceiver could imitate it. The first would be in the heavens, which God would use as a huge advertising sign.

"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars," said Jesus. "The sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven."

The next signs would be on the earth. "Upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken."

Soon after this, said Jesus, everybody will "see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory."

Believers in Jesus should watch very carefully for these signs, because they are the sure tokens of His second advent. "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

Pointing to a fig tree not far away, Jesus reminded His disciples how the bursting forth of nature in the spring time is looked upon by all as a sure sign of the coming of summer.

"So," He said, "when you see all these things come to pass, know . . . that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."

The promised signs in the heavens and on the earth—great, marvelous, and unmistakable—would herald His glorious return.

At this point, of course, you are probably asking, Have these things happened? Have people seen them?

That's worth thinking about, for nobody would want to be taken by surprise. How sad it would be to have Jesus come back some day and no one be ready to welcome Him! You wouldn't want that to happen. Nor would I.

Many people believe that most of these signs have already appeared.

Right after the worst period of suffering the true church of Jesus ever endured, the sun was mysteriously darkened. That was on May 19, 1780, the famous Dark Day of history. The same night, when the moon appeared, it was blood red.

Fifty-three years later, on the night of November 13, 1833, the stars fell from heaven. Not the fixed stars, of course, but meteors. They fell by millions, filling the heavens with light. So wonderful, so majestic, was the scene that many of the people who saw it felt sure it must be the sign Jesus promised.

As for the signs upon the earth—the "distress of nations with perplexity," with men's hearts "failing them for fear" as they look at the things "which are coming on the earth"—can they not all be seen now?

Perhaps it was because Jesus knew all about these things and, as the Prince of prophets, could see them far on down the years, that He urged His disciples to be careful lest they become so careless, or so busy, that they would fail to see the signs, big and plain though they might be.

"Watch at all times," He said to them and to us, "praying that you may have strength to escape all these things that will take place, and to stand before the Son of man" (Luke 21:36, R.S.V.).

Signs in the Heavens

By Mrs. Beveridge R. Spear

1. What question about the future did the disciples once ask Jesus?

"And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" (Matt. 24:3).

NOTE: This same question is in the hearts of multitudes today, Jesus' answer is recorded in Matthew 24 and 25; Mark 13; and Luke 21.

2. What signs did Christ mention in particular?

"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken" (Luke 21:25, 26).

3. When did Jesus say these signs would occur?

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days" (Matt. 24:29).

NOTE: The "tribulation" here referred to was the great papal persecution of the Dark Ages. Other Bible prophecies indicate that papal supremacy was to span a period of 1260 years, from A.D. 538 to 1798.

4. How definitely did Jesus place the first sign, "the sun shall be darkened"?

"In those days, after that tribulation" (Mark 13:24).

NOTE: The first of the signs in the heavens was to occur within the period of 1260 years allotted to the papacy, but after severe persecution had abated. History records that the sun was "darkened" on May 19, 1780, the most spectacular dark day of all time.

5. What was to precede the day of the Lord's wrath foretold by Isaiah?

"Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it. For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine" (Isa. 13:9, 10).

NOTE: The supernatural darkness of May 19, 1780, began about 10:00 A.M., and during the next 14 hours the sun, moon, and stars were not visible. After midnight, when the sky cleared, the moon appeared as blood.

6. How did the prophet Joel describe the same event?

"The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come" (Joel 2:31). "The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining" (Joel 3:15).

7. How did Amos describe this sign of Christ's coming?

"And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day" (Amos 8:9).

NOTE: Of this dramatic event Herschel, the celebrated astronomer, wrote: "The dark day in North America was one of these wonderful phenomena of nature which will always be read with interest, but which philosophy is at a loss to explain."

8. What did Jesus list as the next heavenly sign?

"And the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken" (Mark 13:25).

NOTE: Of this phenomenon, Professor Olmstead, of Yale, wrote: "Those who . . . witnessed the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13, 1833, probably saw the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world." Prof. Chas. A. Young, of Princeton, said that "the sky was as full of them [meteors] as it ever is of snowflakes in a storm." The number at some stations was estimated at 200,000 an hour for five or six hours.

9. What illustration did Jesus use to emphasize the need of sincere preparation of heart for His coming?

"Now learn a parable of the fig tree; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors" (Matt. 24:32, 33).

A Spiritual Health Checkup—

Are You Alive?

By Gilbert McConnell

OF COURSE, I'm alive!" you say. "If I weren't alive I couldn't be reading this!"

One of the main evidences of life is awareness of and reaction to one's surroundings. People read books, watch TV, look out for cars when they cross the street, and note the signs of the weather in the sky.

Dogs give evidence of life when they look for food to eat and cats to chase. Cats look for fences to climb. Plants close their pores in dry weather.

Are you spiritually alive? Do you take in part of your spiritual surroundings? Do you find a Bible among the books on your table? When you hear a new hymn can you

10. What did Christ say should "not pass" ere He comes again?

"Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled" (Matt. 24:34).

11. How did Christ describe His second coming?

"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory" (Matt. 24:30).

12. How many of earth's people will know when Jesus returns?

"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:11). "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen" (Rev. 1:7).

NOTE: There is to be no secrecy about this grand event. "Every eye" will see "this same Jesus" when He comes again. Jesus warned that "false Christs and false prophets" would arise and attempt "to seduce, if it were possible, even the elect" (Mark 13:22).

13. What is the Christian's duty now that these signs have "come to pass" and the end is in sight?

"And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. . . . And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. . . . Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man" (Luke 21:28-36).

tell by the style that it is a sacred song?

Are you alive?

"Of course, I'm alive! If I weren't, I wouldn't have picked up this paper!" Another evidence of being alive

A READING MUST
FOR YOUTH

is the power to move and do. People turn the pages in the books they read; they switch off the TV; they jump when cars come too close; they put up umbrellas when it begins to rain. Animals also have this power of movement. Dogs bury bones and

From the Editors

"For Signs . . ."

Stargazers and crystal-ball readers had a field day the first week of this month when five planets in our solar system lined up like billiard balls in the constellation Aquarius. In India and Nepal, particularly, monks and astrologers attached great significance to the event, and prayed that disaster would not overtake the world.

While we utterly repudiate the speculations of astrology cultists and horoscope readers, we subscribe fully to the belief that God at times uses heavenly bodies to convey messages to mankind. When He first established the functions of the sun and moon, He said, "Let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years" (Gen. 1:14). And in setting forth the signs that would alert the world to the imminence of His second advent, Jesus declared, "The sun [shall] be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven" (Matt. 24:29).

The Dark Day occurred on May 19, 1780. The dazzling shower of meteors took place November 13, 1833. And since then scores of signs on earth have joined their voices in declaring, "Jesus is coming soon!" Though the routine motions of the planets convey no message of warning to us, events in the world do! Pray and work, work and pray, is the call of the hour.

K. H. W.

The Critics and Their Criticisms—1

The Printing Press at Its Worst

Since returning to our editorial office after a long trip, we have spent no little time in the last several weeks going through a pile of books, booklets, papers, pamphlets, and mimeographed material that has been piling up on our desk. Much of this was routine material, informative, enlightening, sometimes inspiring. We found religious news of the world, reports of the progress of our own work in many lands, and invitations to subscribe to endless publications. If this and similar material had been all that we found waiting for us on our desk, we would not be writing this editorial.

But we found also an evil array of a particular kind of pamphlets, booklets, and mimeographed documents, dedicated to a certain theme. The literary construction and the printing were in some instances good, in others very poor, but they were all alike in this bad quality—they all were dedicated to an attack upon the Advent Movement and its leadership. And while they usually focused on the leadership in Washington, they moved by easy and evil generosity to include leadership anywhere and everywhere.

Obviously, they have a wide field to cover. The Advent Movement spreads over the earth with more than a million members, and therefore, the headquarters staff today is much larger than in former times. Besides, they have as their subject of attack finite men and women, and to top it all, they have their own finite, prejudiced minds to aid them in torturing facts and figures to support their favorite perennial theme, namely, that the leadership is thoroughly unworthy of trust and that the denomination has departed from the old doctrinal waymarks. In the reasoning of most of the critics, the second indictment follows from the first.

Now, let no one think that we are laboring under the false hope that anything we say will change the mind or the mood of certain critical people. We have no such mistaken idea of our limited persuasive powers. We are writing, rather, to protect a multitude of our own dear people who are sometimes a little confused by the endless array of plausible indictments of the leadership that are mailed to them. Yes, these are sometimes plausible. Even an outrageous lie can be made to sound plausible. The serpent in the Garden was plausible. And as there were serpents at the beginning, so there will be serpents at the close. The first serpent sought to rob our parents of the Garden of Eden. The last serpents seek to rob us of heaven.

Is this plain language? We hope so. We intend it to be so. This is a time for plain speaking.

Let us say, however, at the outset, to keep all things in perspective, we do not believe that the grand total of this despicable type of critic is very large. But, unfortunately, in our modern day of presses and fast postal service, it does not take many to create a blizzard of printed matter and the general impression that a whole army is attacking the Advent Movement.

One more word we should add to keep a sense of balance in every mind. There is the well-defined professional critic, who can see scarcely anything good in the cause, and if he does see something good he forgets to mention it. Then there is the loyal Adventist—yes, we believe he is loyal—who at times raises his voice on this particular point or that in a local assembly or by letter to some church official concerning a point that is not clear to him and which he feels ought to be different. We are speaking of the former group, not the latter. God forbid that we should ever say anything that would seek to stop any faithful, hard-working, sacrificing Adventist from expressing his mind on some particular point that is not clear to him and which he feels should be changed. Undoubtedly, at times there are things that should be changed. The leadership makes no claim to perfection. The movement will always be in need of improvements until we cross the Jordan.

No, we are not talking about this latter group. We have little difficulty with them. We find rather uniformly that when a point is clearly explained they understand the reasons and go along, or betimes, a correction is made, and then we are all happy over it. Not so with the professional critic. We may provide him with the text of the minutes of an action, a photographic reproduction of an important letter of evidence, but that makes not a whit of difference. He goes right on, because his business is to attack and to downgrade. He does not want his mind disturbed by any contrary facts and refuses even to acknowledge that he has received it. It is of this group that we here wish to speak.

The Charges Against Leaders

We shall take up in order the two main assaults. First, that the leadership in general are unreliable men who cannot be trusted, who have self-seeking desires, who are interested more in power than anything else, and who are concerned to feather their nest, as it were. Later we shall take up the second charge, namely, regarding departures from the old doctrinal waymarks.

We think the point of departure for this discussion may very properly be the point of residence of most of

REVIEW

and Herald

★ A Tribute to Mother

—Page 10

★ Operation Sea Light

—Page 14

Christ Is Coming!

By Harold L. Calkins

Minister, Temple City, California

CHRISt is coming again! The angels left no doubt on this point in speaking to James and John, Peter and Andrew, Thomas and the rest, as they watched Jesus ascend to heaven. The resurrected Christ, with a real body, nailprints in His hands, spear scar in His side, who had taken food in His hand and eaten with them, was now slowly ascending from the Mount of Olives.

As the disciples watched, sorrowful but excited, two angels stood by and said, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:9-11). Christ's ascension to heaven was in a real body, visible to men. His return to earth also will be in a real body, visible to men.

One verse in every 25 in the New Testament speaks of Christ's glorious return, which brings a climax to the 6,000 years of man's history. From one end of the Bible to the other we read it.

Enoch, just seven generations from Adam, said: "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints" (Jude 14). Job, in the oldest book of the Bible, declared: "I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. . . . In my flesh shall I see God" (Job 19:25, 26). David sang with a choir of 4,000 and 120 silver trumpets: "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence" (Ps. 50:3). Jesus, on trial before the highest court in Israel, testified: "Ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven" (Matt. 26:64). James tells Christians: "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord" (James 5:7). John closes the Bible record with: "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him" (Rev. 1:7). "Even so, come, Lord Jesus" (chap. 22:20).

Condensation of a sermon presented on The Adventist Hour telecast, Southern California.

The early church of the second and third centuries wrote this belief into the Apostles' Creed: "He ascended into heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead." Martin Luther, from his intense study of God's Word, declared: "I persuade myself verily it will not be absent full three hundred years longer." John Wesley, who brought new spiritual life to the church in his part of the Reformation, taught that Christ would come soon.

About the year 1800, when many of the signs predicted in the Bible—such as the dark day and the Lisbon earthquake—were taking place, the American Bible Society, the British and Foreign Bible Society, and others sprang up to tell the world what the Bible says about these events. And as the prairie schooners and Conestoga wagons made their way up the Susquehanna and across the Western plains one November night in 1833, another sign set the heavens ablaze with glowing meteorites. Immediately there was renewed interest in the words of Jesus in Matthew 24:29: "The stars shall fall from heaven . . . and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: . . . and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

These signs gave birth to the great
(Turn to page 8)

themselves in this great emergency. In the visions given to Isaiah, to Ezekiel, and to John we see how closely heaven is connected with the events taking place upon the earth and how great is the care of God for those who are loyal to Him. . . . The program of coming events is in the hands of the Lord. The Majesty of heaven has the destiny of nations, as well as the concerns of His church, in His own charge. . . . Finite men are not left to carry the burden of responsibility. We need to trust in God, believe in Him, and go forward."—Ibid., vol. 5, pp. 753, 754.

God still leads, and His church will triumph, come what may. Our part is to be strong in the Lord and be good "soldiers of the cross."

Christ Is Coming!

(Continued from page 1)

Advent Awakening of the 1830's and 1840's. Out of that awakening grew the Seventh-day Adventist Church. We believe that the second advent of Christ to earth is the most important event of the future, and that it is near. For that reason we sacrifice to send missionaries to "every nation, kindred, tongue, and people" so that Christ can come. We have more missionaries per given number of members than any other Protestant church.

A few years ago when the World Council of Churches met at Evanston, Illinois, they took as their theme: "Christ, the Hope of the World." Much of their time was spent discussing the return of Christ to earth. In reporting this meeting, one Australian newspaper used the headline: "Churchmen Divided on Coming of Christ." What a tragedy that church leaders are divided on this great theme on which all Bible writers are agreed. If we would speak to the world today with prophetic impact, we must agree with the prophets of the Old and New Testaments.

The fact of Christ's second coming is one of the clearest teachings of Scripture. God tells us how He will come. "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him" (Rev. 1:7). Martin Luther said of this verse: "His last coming will be such that all must see Him. . . . They shall see that he is none other than the man Christ Jesus, in bodily form, as he was born of the virgin Mary and walked upon this earth."

Especially does Jesus warn against alleged secret appearances in the desert or in a secret chamber: "Go not forth: . . . believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be" (Matt. 24:26, 27). Christ's coming will not be secret. It will be the most widely known event ever to take place on earth. More people will see it than saw Glenn or Carpenter make their historic flights. Every eye shall see Him, every ear hear the trumpet call.

Even the dead will hear in their graves and come forth. The wicked will see Him when He comes. According to Revelation 6:14-17, they will cry to the rocks and mountains to hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne. Second Thessalonians 1 and 2 add that the wicked will be destroyed by "the brightness of his coming."

Someone says: "That's what I don't like about the coming of Christ. It seems so morbid to think of sudden death for all the wicked." Yes, it is unpleasant to think of death. But, have you ever bought insurance? Or have you made a will, or bought a cemetery lot? Why? These precautions are urged upon people by salesmen, because accidents happen and all will die. It is good sense to be prepared for accidents that may happen. It is better sense to be ready for the certain coming of Christ.

D. L. Moody said he was in the church for many years before he heard a sermon on the second coming of Christ. "But since I know that my Lord is coming back, I feel like working three times as hard." Remember that Christ Himself is not willing for any to perish, but desires that all should come to repentance. He wants you to be ready to meet Him. That which is terror to the disobedient is deliverance to believers. Just think, true Christians who are living when Jesus comes will never die. They will be changed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump" (1 Cor. 15:52).

The Opposite of Morbidity

"Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing" (Isa. 35:5, 6). "We look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body" (Phil. 3:20, 21). "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain" (Rev. 21:4). Here is the opposite of morbidity. It is the most hopeful, joyous prospect the future offers. Is it any wonder that the disciples called themselves those that love His appearing? They loved Jesus. They were ready to meet Him, because they had Him in their hearts.

Christ is eagerly anticipating reunion with His people. "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee" (Isa. 62:5). Those who are in love with each other are eager to be together. Are you in love with your Lord? Then you will love His appearing. You will pray, "Thy kingdom come." You will want Him to return to earth as soon as possible.

This is the blessed hope Paul speaks of. It is the highest incentive to right living. "Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure" (1 John 3:3). There is life-changing power in the hope of seeing Jesus. It makes better men and women, better homes, better husbands and wives who are true to each other. It gives high, pure ideals to youth. It makes employers fair with their employees. It makes workmen want to deliver an honest day's work. The hope of seeing Jesus closes gambling dens and houses of vice. It cures thieves and embezzlers. It gives hope in the face of doom-laden atomic clouds. Nothing can produce higher morality than the hope of hearing the Judge of all the earth say: "Well done, . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

This love for the Lord leads men to love their neighbors. It does more for world betterment than the Peace Corps or urban renewal or social legislation. Love for God touches the springs of human action. When the heart is changed, the habits and the slums are changed.

I saw a missionary from the South Pacific and heard him tell of the change the gospel made in the lives of naked, pig-greased cannibals. When asked whether it was difficult to get them to give up these filthy habits, he said, "No, we rarely have to say anything about them. The gospel changes hearts, and then the surroundings change. The people smell better, they eat better, they look happier."

Every man—whether in Africa, New Guinea, the slums of New York, or the estates of Beverley Hills—every man that has this hope, this hope of seeing Jesus, purifies himself.

Friend, the condition of this world and the prospect of the next, impel us to turn our back on the evil of this world, and to live for that blessed hope and glorious appearing of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

The Heavenly Countdown

The great heavenly countdown has already begun. We have passed the great tribulation, the dark day, the falling of the stars; we see men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming upon the earth. When the gospel has been preached to every nation, and probation has closed amid the hectic turmoil of the last days, all eyes will be drawn to the east. There a small dark cloud will appear on the horizon. In the atmosphere of unprecedented fear some say, "Is that Omaha going up in an atomic cloud? Or Washington? Will Los Angeles be next?"

Nearer comes the cloud. Christians recognize in it the sign of the Son of man. Crowds gather in the streets; some on the housetops; some on the mountains. The cloud is growing as they watch it. Newsmen try to capture the scene, but before one picture is made, there is another, more awe inspiring.

The sun rises, but its feeble radiance is unnoticed as the cloud gathers brilliance. The moon stands still. Dark, heavy clouds clash against one another. Mountains shake and move out of their places. Islands disappear. Great tidal waves turn the sea into a boiling caldron.

"It is larger!" they cry as excitement mounts. "It is coming closer!"

Every eye is wide to observe the growing brightness. In observatories and tracking stations trained watchers hold their breath and look at one another. "It is nearer!" The base of the cloud takes on the appearance of fire. On housetops boys shade their eyes from the flaming light. Men in a thousand places suddenly realize the possibility. Some argue, "It is just a star. It will miss the earth by 10,000 miles." But there is no precedent for such a phenomenon. A rainbow is seen arched over the cloud, now blazing with white light.

"Could it be that the Bible might be true after all?" the space scientists ask one another. "Could this be—Jesus? No, it's unscientific." All laughter ceases. Some faces turn pale as the blinding cloud seems to fill the sky and living forms of angels on the edge of the cloud are silhouetted against the surrounding heavens. "It is alive!" they cry. Many turn to flee, some to fallout shelters, some to caves. Even earth's great men plead with the rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the supernatural glory.

As the living cloud comes still nearer, every eye beholds the Prince of Life, "on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle" (Rev. 14:14). In His left hand He holds a silver trumpet. The faces of those who have rejected Him gather blackness as they wail, "The great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" (chap. 6:17).

"We Have Waited"

But there are others whose faces reflect the radiance of the glory of Jesus. "This is our God," they shout, "we have waited for him, and he will save us" (Isa. 25:9)! Christ has come in His own glory and the glory of all heaven's shining angels, filling the heavens with dazzling splendor and a song of triumph. Gazing on the graves of the sleeping saints, the Son of God calls in trumpet tones, "Awake, awake, awake, ye that sleep in the dust, and arise."

The earth trembles with a mighty earthquake, and the graves are opened. Throughout the length and breadth of the earth the dead in Christ arise with the freshness and vigor of eternal youth. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them . . . , to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thess. 4:16, 17).

Can you picture the reality and splendor of that day? From that cloud of glory Jesus shall send His angels and they shall gather together His elect, from one end of heaven to the other (Matt. 24:31). In that day you will see a funeral in reverse. The graves open as wide as before, but new, disease-free bodies come forth to receive the finishing touch of immortality. They are reunited with loved ones. Children, separated by death, are placed in the arms of their mothers. Husbands and wives are united again and taken up together to meet the Lord in the air. A column of angels on either side escort them to that cloud where Jesus waits to welcome them. What a solemn day! What a happy day for those who hear the words "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (chap. 25:34).

Are you ready for Jesus to come? Are you ready to look into His face with joy and say, "This is my God"? Won't you turn your gaze upward just now and say, "Lord, remember me when thou comest"?

Life Sketch of Elder L. K. Dickson

Louis Klaer Dickson was born in White Plains, New York, June 8, 1890, and died in National City, California, March 24, 1963.

His father was a Presbyterian minister, but his mother became a Seventh-day Adventist by discovering the Sabbath truth in a copy of Bible Readings for the Home Circle. At the age of 18 Louis became a colporteur, later entering the ministry and working in California. In 1911 he was united in marriage with Ysabel Eunice Morton, and in 1915 they moved to the Western Oregon Conference where Elder Dickson carried on pastoral and evangelistic work.

After about six years in that field he was called to the Southern California Conference, where he served only a short time before being called to New York City as the City Temple pastor and evangelist in that needy metropolis. He and his family labored there for ten years, where Elder Dickson did a strong evangelistic work in the heavily congested downtown areas, evangelism being a work he greatly loved.

While in New York City he was elected president of the Greater New York Conference, serving there until 1933, when he accepted a call to Florida as president of that conference.

He later served as president of the Northern California Conference, then of Southeastern California, and subsequently of the Pacific Union Conference, from 1941 to 1945. Wherever he worked he labored devotedly for God.

In 1945 Elder Dickson was asked to go to Washington, D.C., as vice-president of the General Conference for North America, and two years later he became a general vice-president of the General Conference.

In July of 1958 he retired from the work to which the Lord had called him as a young man, only wishing that he had many more years to give to the dear Lord who had led him all the way.

On February 13, 1963, he was struck by a car and severely injured. Six weeks later he fell asleep until the Lord returns to call His beloved dead to awaken and be with Him forevermore. The funeral service was held in the Paradise Valley church, with interment in Glen Abbey Memorial Park.

Elder Dickson is survived by his wife Ysabel; two sons, Dr. Louis L. and Merlyn K.; a daughter, Mrs. Jean D. Lewis; a brother, Dr. A. R. Dickson; seven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

GEORGE VANDEMAN

the Sabbath school and church. After the service he met the pastor and a contact was made that resulted in his returning again and again. Eventually he joined the church. All this happened because a ten-year-old boy was not ashamed to carry his Bible to Sabbath school and to whistle a cheerful gospel tune as he went to church.

(Have a child read the fourth text, Matthew 24:14.) This gospel is being preached in most of the countries of the world. Time is running out for the world and for the church. It is wonderful to know that we may still have a part. Tomorrow we will talk about the importance of time. Before tomorrow, please read a text that talks about time—a day and an hour. This is Matthew 24:36.

Prayer

(Again have sentence prayers by several volunteers. The leader or some other adult should close with a brief, earnest petition in behalf of the boys and girls.)

LESSON 6

When Time Runs Out

Preparation for the Day

1. Bring an alarm clock or a clock with a fairly loud tick, some road maps, and a watch.

2. Write the following Bible references on small cards to be looked up and read by four pupils when called for: Luke 21:25, 26; Matthew 24:37-39; 2 Timothy 3:1-4; Matthew 24:44.

Presentation

(Set the clock on the table. Ask the children to be quiet so that all can hear the clock tick for 60 seconds.) Do you hear the tick of the clock? Do you know what message the ticking of the clock brings us today? Boys and girls, the message is: TIME IS RUNNING OUT! (Place on the acrostic banner the remainder of the words, WHEN TIME RUNS OUT.) Not much time remains for us here on earth; the end is near. The ticking of the clock reminds us that time is very precious. Soon Jesus will come, and we must be ready to meet Him.

In the text I asked you to read, Jesus mentions a day and an hour. What day, what hour? Jesus had been talking about things that were to happen before He would return to earth. He had given many definite signs by which men might know when His coming is near, but the exact time—the day and hour—no one knows except the heavenly Father. This is something that God has not revealed. But He has revealed many things by which we may tell when His coming is near at hand. By these signs “we know” that time is running out.

Have you ever taken a long trip? Some of you may have ridden on a train or a bus; others may have gone by plane or even on a big ship. I suppose most of us have taken trips by auto. Perhaps you planned a long cross-country trip, and your father sent to an oil company for a set of maps with suggested routes all marked. At last everything was loaded, and away you went.

Do you remember how careful you were to watch the maps and the highway signs so that you might know where you were, how to stay on the right road? When you started out perhaps you estimated how long it would take to get to your destination, but you couldn't tell exactly when you would arrive. How carefully you watched the road signs as you neared the place where you were to visit relatives or spend most of your vacation. Maps and signs are very important.

God's Word maps out the way we should take in order to prepare for heaven, and signs given in the Bible help us to stay on course and to know when we are nearing our eternal destination. (Have a child read the first text, Luke 21:25, 26.) Jesus gave us many signs to help us know where we are along the road of life. Some of these signs no deceiver could imitate. Sun, moon, and stars would tell the great story “Jesus is coming soon! Get ready!” We all know, of course, that the Dark Day of history was a long time ago—May 19, 1780; and the falling-stars sign took place November 13, 1833. These mighty signs in the heavens have come and gone, so we must be very near the end of time.

“Distress of nations” and men's hearts “failing them for fear”—these dreadful signs also have come to our world. Wars, with their bombings and air raids, death, suffering, and destruction, have come to the people of our modern world. These, along with natural disasters such as earthquakes, tornadoes, fires, and floods, have surely filled the hearts of men with fear. Jesus said this would happen and would be an important sign that His coming is near.

(Have a child read the second text, Matthew 24:37-39.) Here Jesus tells us that His return will be like the coming of the Flood in the days of Noah. The business of living was going on very much as usual when the Flood came. When Jesus comes again people will be doing many ordinary things. That is why we need to be ready at all times for His coming.

When we read in the Bible about conditions as they were in the days of Noah we can see that our world is very much the same. There was violence and killing; people crowded together in cities; men began to take more than one wife; skillful men began to invent and make many things.

But God was not glorified in any of this. In fact men became so selfish and wicked that God finally had to punish them with the Flood. But in His mercy He spared the few who believed in Him, whose faith led them to enter the ark for safety and deliverance.

These same conditions are in our world now. We have many large and wicked cities; men with great skill and wisdom invent wonderful things, but many of them are weapons of destruction. God is not glorified by these wonders. Today there is much family trouble, with people divorcing and remarrying, not once, but many times. Homes are broken up and children are left without parents to guide and help them to grow up properly.

Violence is everywhere. Days and nights are filled with television programs not safe for boys and girls to watch, for little by little, watching sin in action causes a person to think that evil isn't really evil, that it is all right to be cruel or deceitful if you are not caught. Becoming familiar with evil causes us to lose our desire for that which is pure, good, and beautiful. Conditions all around us, perhaps even in our own homes, should wake us up to the fact that time is short, and Jesus is coming soon.

(Have a child read the third text, 2 Timothy 3:1-4.) Let us notice two things in particular in these verses. Paul says that in the last days children will be “disobedient to parents,” and “lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God.” These are serious words for us to think about. There are many tempting pleasures in our world. For some, movies are a great attraction.

One Wednesday evening a little boy begged his mother to allow him to go to a show. “Mother,” he pleaded, “everybody says it is such a good picture. It won't hurt me.”

His mother replied, “But, son, you're not old enough to choose for yourself and you cannot go without your mother. Anyway tonight is prayer meeting night, and you know we always go.”

“But, Mother,” the little boy declared, “if you'd only go to the show once, you'd never want to go to prayer meeting again.” And that, boys and girls, is much more true than this little boy thought, for it is things like this that take Jesus and the desire for prayer out of our hearts.

(Have a child read the fourth text, Matthew 24:44.) The clock ticks on, saying, “Get ready! Get ready! Get ready!” Here I have another timepiece, just a little watch. Do you suppose this little watch might preach us a sermon? Listen and we shall see. First, there are two main parts to a watch, the outside, or case, and the inside, which we call the works. Both are important, but of

By LALLAGE

J.

EGLESTON

If you meet with opposition
In all that you attempt to do;
If you are being misunderstood—
Jesus once walked this way too.
If the clouds grow dark and heavy,
And you would see the sunshine through—Pray.

Prayer will make the burdens lighter,
Help to dry the falling tear.
Prayer gives faith and hope and courage;
Prayer brings trust to banish fear.
Prayer brings us closer still to Jesus,
Who waits us at the hour of prayer—
Why not pray?

the two the inside is more important. The case need not be expensive or beautiful, but if the works are of good quality the watch is good and useful.

You and I may not be handsome or beautiful, we may not have expensive clothes, but if our hearts are right we please Jesus and bless others. Again, this watch contains some jewels. Where are they, on the inside or the outside? Yes, they are inside, where they help the watch to run smoothly and accurately. Some people think they must have jewels added to the outside to make them pretty, but God wants only jewels of faith, truth, loyalty, purity, and love in our hearts.

The real purpose of the watch is to be useful rather than ornamental. Its hands are always busy. That's a good lesson for us, don't you think? Another thing we learn from the watch is that we must keep our lives clean and free from sin. Just a tiny speck of dirt in its works can stop the watch. Just a little sin in the life can spoil that life and keep it from being ready for Jesus to come.

Watchmakers tell us that in order to run best a watch needs to be wound regularly, and that the best time is in the morning as the day begins. That is true of our lives. Our lives need to be wound regularly by bringing them to Jesus every morning in prayer and Bible study before we begin the duties of the day. Let's remember to observe the Morning Watch.

Every time we see a watch let us be reminded of the things we must do in order to be ready to meet Jesus. It is not enough to say, "Someday I'll get ready," for time is running out. The only safe thing is to BE READY at all times.

The story is told of a lazy, dirty hermit who lived in a tumbledown shack on the side of a big hill overlooking the valley. One day, as he sat among the rubbish and weeds in front of his shack, he was suddenly surprised to see the king from the city in the valley, who had come for a walk up the hillside. The king came and stood in front of the hermit's poor house and gazed at the majestic mountains on the other side of the valley. "Ah, it is beautiful," he murmured. Then he saw the hermit. "May I come again and look?" asked the king. The hermit was so ashamed of his dirt and weeds that he couldn't speak, so he hung his head in shame, and the king went away.

"He will come again," thought the hermit. "I must get ready." So he set about to clear away the weeds and repair the broken stool. Then the king came again. The day was warm and the royal guest asked the hermit for a glass of water. But his one cup was dirty, the water bucket empty, and the spring where he got his water was covered over with weeds. He tried to clean the spring and the cup, but while he was doing this the king went away. "He will come again. I must get ready."

So the hermit worked to clean out the spring and to clear the rubbish from the house. The king came once again. He was hungry. "Might I have a bite to eat?" he asked. But the hermit had nothing in his shack but some half-rotten grapes. He wrung his hands in agony, and the king went away.

"He will come again," declared the hermit. Now he cut and sold wood to buy meal, and each day he made some fresh cakes. He watered the garden and cleared out all the weeds. Then he saw that his clothes were ragged and dirty. He cut and sold more wood so he could buy some new clothes. Then he bathed and waited each day for the king to return.

Finally the king came again. "Ah," he said, "the sunset is so beautiful. I'm sure the sunrise must be lovely from here too. Please let me stay all night so I can see it." The hermit did not dare tell the king that he had only dirty rags on the floor to sleep on, so he hung his head, and the king went away. "I'm sure he's coming again," said the hermit, so he built a porch on his shack and put in it a comfortable couch and nice blankets. Once again the king came. This time he ate, and slept, and continued to live with the hermit on the mountainside.

When time runs out, boys and girls, Jesus, our King, will come again. Time has almost run out. It is now that we must get rid of weeds and dirt and rubbish and the rags of sin and selfishness. We want to go home to live forever with our King. Before we can do that we must make room for Him to live in our hearts.

Prayer

Today as we think how soon our King may come, how many of you boys and girls want Jesus to live in your hearts? How many want to be remembered especially in the closing prayer, that God will help you to be ready when Jesus comes?

(We suggest that the leader offer the prayer, remembering the requests.)

The VOICE FROM SINAI

By H. M. Tippet

Clear, concise understanding of the basic rules of life is rare indeed in these days of complex living. Because God's law is just as binding today as when given on Sinai so long ago, it is important that those seeking to serve Him understand as fully as possible the intent of the Ten Commandments.

The Voice From Sinai treats each commandment separately but shows the relationship between them. You will find a clearer understanding of the nature of God and of His will for man in this new paperback by H. M. Tippet.

ONLY $1.00

When ordering by mail, allow 15¢ for mailing costs. Add sales tax where applicable.

ORDER FROM YOUR CHURCH MISSIONARY SECRETARY OR YOUR BOOK AND BIBLE HOUSE.

Published by Southern Publishing Association, Nashville, Tennessee

it will cut its way through the strongest barriers, and triumph over every obstacle. . . .

In the Bible are revealed visions of future glory, scenes pictured by the hand of God, and these are dear to His church. By faith we may stand on the threshold of the eternal city, and hear the gracious welcome given to those who in this life co-operate with Christ, regarding it as an honor to suffer for His sake. As the words are spoken, "Come, ye blessed of My Father," they cast their crowns at the feet of the Redeemer, exclaiming, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing. . . . Honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever" [Matt. 25:34; Rev. 5:12, 13].⁸

SOURCES

- ¹ Review and Herald, April 12, 1898, p. 229.
- ² Prophets and Kings, p. 148.
- ³ Review and Herald, April 12, 1898, pp. 229, 230.
- ⁴ Ibid., June 8, 1897, p. 354.
- ⁵ That I May Know Him, p. 357.
- ⁶ Review and Herald, April 12, 1898, p. 230.
- ⁷ Ibid., Nov. 29, 1881, pp. 337, 338.
- ⁸ The Acts of the Apostles, pp. 600-602.

(Reading, Sunday, November 6, 1966)

Loyalty to the Blessed Hope

By H. M. S. RICHARDS

MANY years ago a father had to leave home on a long journey.

Just before he left he took his little three-and-a-half-year-old boy upon his knee to talk to him about his trip. The boy said, "Daddy, when will you be coming back again?" The father knew that he could not explain to such a little fellow that he would be back in September. The boy would not understand it. He knew nothing about the months, about dates or times or seasons, so the father said, "Listen, son, when you see the leaves on the trees turning red and brown and yellow, and beginning to fall to the ground, then you can be sure that father is coming back very soon."

The next day the father left home. During the months of July and August the little boy would walk with his mother out in the forest and keep looking at the trees, and he would talk about his absent father. Slowly the days and weeks went by until it was early September, then mid-September. Then, though the boy did not notice it very much, the leaves on the trees were slowly changing color. One night there was a mighty wind and millions of leaves came down, filling the sidewalks and the gutters, sweeping through the forests. The next morning when he went out and saw these leaves in great piles he began to kick them into the air. Soon he began to shout, and his mother heard him say, "Hurrah, hurrah! Daddy's coming soon!"

There's expectation all over the world today. The forests are turning color, the leaves are falling. These signs of the times are appearing. Jesus said, "When these things begin to come to pass"—what, be negligent? be careless? pay no attention? be sad and gloomy? No, indeed. "Then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28).

The great future of every child of God may be dawning, for the coming of the Lord draweth near. There are many Old Testament prophecies that point to the second coming of Christ and the great events that are to occur in connection with the setting up of His kingdom of glory. There is the great prophecy of the second chapter of Daniel, with its four successive kingdoms—Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome.

There was the division of Rome's great empire into the modern nations of Europe, and their troubled history down to the present hour. According to Daniel 2: 44: "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed."

Whenever I read the second chapter of Daniel I think of the words of the song that so many of us at one time could repeat from memory:

"First, the Assyrian kingdom ruled the world,
Then Medo-Persia's banners were unfurled;
And after Greece held universal sway,
Rome seized the scepter—Where are we today?

"Down in the feet of iron and of clay,
Weak and divided, soon to pass away;
What will the next great, glorious drama be?
Christ and His coming, And eternity."

The second coming of Christ is imminent; the setting up of His kingdom is the next mighty event in the history of the human race. Did not Jesus say that "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory" (Matt. 25:31)? Where there's a throne, there's a king. Where there's a king, there's a kingdom.

We remember also the words of Jesus about His return. He said He would return: "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John 14:1-3). Our Saviour is a true witness. He will do exactly as He promised. He will return to this world. He will come back again.

Turning to the book of Revelation, which is particularly Christ's book—it is called "the revelation of Jesus Christ"—we find in the sixth chapter the last part of the great prophecy of the seven seals. In the twelfth and thirteenth verses we read about the opening of the sixth seal: "And, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind."

Three Events in History

Notice here three great events in history. As we near the end of the prophecy of the seven seals we find three historical events that can be assigned dates. So this seal is dated, and we can know when it began; first the mighty earthquake, then the black sun and the moon as blood, then the falling of the stars. The first five seals bring us down into the days of the great Protestant Reformation. Was there "a great earthquake" after this, an earthquake that has been noted as one of the greatest of history? Yes, indeed; the Lisbon earthquake of November 1, 1755. This event exerted a profound influence on the world. Books have been written about it. Not only the earth was shaken, but the philosophy and religious views of the people were mightily shaken by this earthquake. Voltaire, the great skeptic, wrote a book about it.

Not long after this earthquake the sun became black. A very dark day occurred on May 19, 1780, and that night the full moon looked like blood. Then came the falling stars, on November 13, 1833. Suppose these events had taken place in reverse order, or had been mixed up in some other way. The infidel or the skeptic could laugh at the Word of God. But no; these events occurred in the exact order in which the Bible had predicted.

History proves that God spoke the truth. We are living after these three events took place; in other words, after verse 13 of Revelation 6.

Now notice verses 14-17: "And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" We are living now between verses 13 and 14 of Revelation the sixth chapter. The great earthquake, the black sun, the falling stars—these events have taken place; but the departing of the heaven as a scroll has not yet occurred, nor the great prayer meeting in which skeptics, infidels, and all the unsaved will be praying, not to God, but to mountains and rocks.

Mentioned Frequently in Scripture

We should love the truth of our Lord's appearing because of the large place it occupies in Scripture, and because God loves it. If frequency of mention is one measure of its importance, it must be one of the supreme truths of Scripture. Baptism is mentioned only about twenty times in seven Epistles. It is not once named in the other fourteen. The Lord's Supper is mentioned less than half a dozen times in the New Testament, and in twenty of the twenty-one Epistles it is not alluded to at all. The second coming of Christ is spoken of more than three hundred times in the New Testament. According to some readers that is about one verse in every twenty-five or thirty. God must think a great deal of this truth of the second coming of Christ or He would not speak about it so much in His Word.

Why should we not be loyal to such a message, to such a great truth? How is it possible for a person to believe the Bible as the Word of God and still not be loyal to this great and wonderful truth of the second coming of our Lord, yes, the imminent coming of our Lord? The word "imminent" means impending, something that hangs over, something that will take place. We know not the hour, as Jesus has said, but we can see the signs and know that in His providence He is keeping it before our eyes so that we shall be preparing ourselves for it. Our faith in the coming of the Lord will be tested; and one reason that some people have lost their faith in it is that they have been setting dates for it—in their own minds if not openly. Some say that God has delayed His coming, or He may never come. Here is the danger. The Scripture says, "Ye have need of patience, [that ... ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry" (Heb. 10: 36, 37). The word here translated "patience" is translated elsewhere as "endurance" or "faithfulness."

In James 5:7 we are told to "be patient . . . unto the coming of the Lord." We need to have trust, we need to endure in this faith, for according to the prophecies of Scripture, this glorious message of the second coming of Christ will be preached worldwide. We read this in Revelation 14, beginning with the sixth verse, right down to verse 14.

Time to Renew Our Faith

This, my fellow believers, is the time to renew our faith in this great and wonderful and comforting truth of the coming of our Lord. We find our salvation from sin and our hope of eternal life in the first coming of our Saviour and His atoning death upon the cross for us. We find our sanctification through the indwelling of the blessed Holy Spirit, ministering this righteousness of Jesus to us here and now. We shall find our final and instantaneous glorification at the second coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven.

Friends, if we lose hope, we lose everything. And this is a blessed hope, because it is a hope that comes from God, and looks to God for its fulfillment. We are looking to Jesus Christ and His glorious appearing, which is our blessed hope. Why? Because it brings to this world the Blessor Himself, even Jesus our Lord, and because it will therefore bring all the blessings promised to the people of God from the beginning of time.

Certainly, friends, things will not go on forever as they have been going, and are now going. A great change for the better will come because the Changer Himself, the Lord of creation and redemption, has promised to return. No wonder that promise brings a hope to our hearts, which is called "that blessed hope." That is what we really long for. It is what sustains us in health and in sickness, in poverty and in prosperity, in tranquillity and in trouble.

My father was a preacher of this blessed hope, and memory just now goes back to my boyhood. It seems that I can hear his earnest words repeating Matthew 24:36-42, ending with this line: "Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." There at the end of the platform, in the big tent, sat my

Giving and Having

A meditation on Luke 6:38

By MYRTLE LEORA NELSON

"The more you pick, the more you have,"

The gardener said one day,

As I walked among the blossoms

In the spring-filled month of May.

"The more you give, the more you have"—

Traveling the happy way.

mother at the little organ. It seems that I am there now, watching her. I can hear her sweet voice beginning to sing, at the close of father's sermon:

"We know not the hour of the Master's appearing,

Yet signs all foretell that the moment is nearing

When He shall return—'tis a promise most cheering—

But we know not the hour."

I am so glad that my brother and I grew up with our first childhood memories filled with God's promises of this blessed hope. We have always had something to live for, something to look forward to. Now father has fallen asleep in Jesus, but we know that when the Saviour comes he will awake in His likeness whose gospel he faithfully preached.

It is wonderful to live with a great hope in the heart. Dostoevski was right when he said, "The secret of a man's being is not only to live, but to have something to live for." I am glad that my grandfather and my father preached this message of hope in Christ—hope for this world, hope for the world to come. I am glad that I can preach it, and that my sons are preaching it.

"While pilgrims here we journey on
In this dark vale of sin and gloom,
Through tribulation, hate, and scorn,
Or through the portals of the tomb,
Till our returning King shall come
To take His exile captives home,
O! what can buoy the spirits up?
'Tis this alone—the blessed hope."

—ANNIE R. SMITH

The wonderful message of our crucified, risen, and soon-coming Lord is reaching out to earth's remotest bounds, and the gospel in this setting is preparing a people to meet the Saviour when He comes. As it goes out, it must make the world better. It must care for the sick and the troubled. It must be a healing, helpful, holy, redeeming message. "For the hope of Israel" (Acts 28:20) the apostle Paul was bound with a chain. It is for the hope of God's people that we must sacrifice and labor and pray until the day-break and the shadows flee away, and the King is here again.

"When the ones we've loved so much
Vanish from our sight and touch;
When their words of love and cheer
Fall no longer on our ear;

"When they yield their latest breath
To the mystery of death;
When our tears fall soon and late,
In a house that's desolate—

"Peace to thee! In Christ they sleep;
They are His to love and keep.
Hush! To every murmur dumb,
It is only till He come."

—H. M. S. RICHARDS

*The shadows lengthened, then were gone,
A glorious day was nearly done.
I heard soft whispers of a sighing wind,
And listened to the muted distant calls
Of a lonely turtledove.*

Evening Reveries

By DALE A. STRAWN, M.D.

*And rustling, golden, autumn leaves,
Touched by a gentle breeze, then wafted down
From some enchanted nearby vale, Bestirred nostalgic memories that lingered on,
But left my heart at peace.*

*I saw the dying fires of a flaming western sky,
And was awed at the Master Artist's skill
As He brushed the sunset's crimson glow
On canvas wide and low, above earth's rim.
Then came the shades of night.*

From the Editors

THE DAY THE SUN TURNED RED

A fascinating description of the Dark Day of 1780 appears in a book entitled The Great Events of Our Past Century, issued in 1879. Although the book describes 78 events of note between 1776 and 1876, it states that the Dark Day of May 19, 1780, was the most mysterious of all natural phenomena. "Thousands of the good people of that day became fully convinced that the end of all things terrestrial had come." It was indeed an awesome spectacle.

For three or four days the sun's orb had appeared unusually red, and the color of the nearly full moon had given off an unnatural light. According to a Professor Williams of Harvard College, the barometric pressure was a little higher than usual; the weather had been fair and cool for the season. But as darkness came on at midday Friday, May 19, readings taken in two places in Massachusetts showed the pressure falling markedly.

The first evidence that that hazy Friday would differ from the preceding days was the approach of banks of heavy clouds moving in on the northeastern United States—New England primarily—from the southwest. Some strata were low enough so that distant hills could be seen above them. Other strata came in between the high thin overcast and what appears to have been ground fog. Almost all accounts of any detail mention the unprecedented amount of vapor in the air, the variability of the winds, and the strange movements of "the vapors" both vertically and horizontally. Because of their composition and stratification, these clouds refracted the sunlight and cast a yellowish pall over the entire region. Polished silver objects, one reported, appeared to be of brass.

The darkness extended over the populated areas of New England inland to Albany, New York, and along the coast from Maine southward, probably only to New Jersey. Its intensity was so great in portions of New Hampshire and Massachusetts that large print could not be read, even by those with good eyes, and candles lit indoors cast clear shadows on the walls. Barnyard fowls roosted and songbirds sang their evening songs. Much normal business activity came to a standstill.

This is not the only day of mysterious darkness on record. Others before 1780 were October 21, 1716; August 9, 1732; and October 19, 1762. A recent occurrence, apparently more widespread but not so intense, was on September 24, 1950, when again birds went to roost in midday and a major-league afternoon baseball game was played entirely under lights for the first time in the game's history. The area affected was the Great Lakes, the Ohio Valley, and the Middle Atlantic regions of the United States.

Reports of the Dark Day of 1780 refer to the "smoky and vaporous character" of the air; the rain as being "thick, dark, and sooty." Rainwater in tubs was found to have a light scum on it, "which, on being rubbed between the thumb and finger, seemed to resemble the black ashes of burnt leaves." The smell of burnt leaves was noticeable in the air. "Small birds were found suffocated by the vapor." Reports of the 1762 event mention the falling of rain along with "fine black particles, in appearance much like sulphur, both in smell and quality." The possibility that "perhaps great fires in distant woods" were a contributing factor in 1780 was mentioned. One author said: "For several weeks previous there had been extensive fires in the woods."

Reports of the darkness that fell over the eastern United States in 1950 state the cause categorically: "An extensive layer of smoke originated from forest fires in the Canadian provinces of British Columbia and Alberta. Subsequently it spread over large areas of Canada and the eastern United States."—Monthly Weather Review, Sept., 1950. Newspaper accounts the next day (September 25) cited the Weather Bureau as saying that such a combination of special atmospheric conditions and a great amount of smoke is rare.

Those who accept the Dark Day of 1780 as a sign of the end (Mark 13:24) may be reluctant to consider forest fires as a fulfillment of prophecy. Yet other signs in the natural world are attributable to natural causes: earthquakes originate along subterranean faults as pressures build up and subside; and famines follow drought, storms, and improvident farming methods. The issue becomes clearer when we recall that prophecy is a foretelling of future events, not a cause of those events. Christ foresaw the dark-day phenomena of our day and indicated that those who saw the blood-red sun and understood His words would know that the end is near.

The darkening of the sun and moon is a sign of the end. We know that Christ's word is true and that His return is sure.

F. D. Y.

BIBLE TRANSLATION METHODS EXAMINED—3

Are new translations necessary? Are not the old adequate?

There are several reasons why new translations have appeared from time to time, since the origin of the English Bible in the paraphrases of Caedmon about A.D. 670 into Anglo-Saxon, an ancient form of English.

1. Changes in the English language itself. To illustrate these changes, we quote Hebrews 1:1, 2 from Wycliffe's Bible, produced near the close of the fourteenth century: "Manyfold and many maners sum tyme God spekinge to fadris in prophetis, at the laste in thes daies spak to us in the sone; whom he ordeynede eyr of alle thingis, by whom he made and the worldis."

When the King James Version was produced, its spelling differed from that in present editions. Notice how that version rendered Hebrews 1:1, 2 in 1611: "God who at sundry times, and in diuers manners, spake in time past vnto the Fathers by the Prophets, hath in these last dayes spoken vnto vs by his Sonne, whom he hath appointed heire of all things, by whom also he made the worlds."

There are many archaic and obsolete expressions in the King James Version, some of which are meaningless to the average reader. For example, what do the following mean: "bruit" (see Jer. 10:22); "pill," as a verb (see Gen. 30:37, 38); "sith" (see Eze. 35:6); or "withs" (see Judges 16:7)? Modern translations use words that are understood by contemporary readers. This is one of the contributions the newer versions make.

More important is the realization that many words of one of the candidates, who told how the devil had tried to stop her from attending evangelistic meetings. He spoke to her through a spirit medium representing her dead son. "Mother, I'm well and happy here, but if you are to be happy too, you must promise me that you will never again attend the Christian meetings." Only earnest prayer and much visiting and Bible study by the pastor and the Bible instructor enabled this earnest Buddhist woman to find her way back to the meetings and the remnant church.

A family enjoys a simple meal while attending the Hokkaido, Japan, camp meeting session.

A number of earnest young people were also baptized, after many tears, much prayer, and several long-distance telephone calls to parents. Still another cause of rejoicing was the rebaptism of an elderly woman, first baptized more than 35 years ago. She had lost contact with the church during the war years and never made her way back till she came in contact with the church at the time of our first camp meeting three years ago. Somehow the news of an Adventist meeting reached her in her little mountain village, where she ran a candy store for children. She has been a faithful attendee of camp meeting each year and made her decision to rejoin the church and was baptized this year.

The youngest baptized was 13 and the oldest a woman of 75.

Elders Bascom, K. Yasui, T. Saito, C. B. Watts, and R. I. Gainer assisted the president of the Hokkaido Mission in the meetings.

Business Session Convened

Following the camp meeting, the second business session of the mission was held, with 43 delegates in attendance. One interesting fact was that more than 40 per cent of the baptisms of the mission were the result not of public evangelism but of the witness of friends and relatives who were Christians. Figures presented indicated a 37 per cent gain in membership over the past two years, with a total membership at present of 227.

A new church is to be organized in Asahikawa and new work begun in the eastern portion of the island at Kushiro in September, when a colporteur and Bible instructor will move to that port city of nearly 200,000, the center of the whaling industry of Hokkaido.

The mission workers, their wives and children, more than 30 in all, spent one day after the session in a workers' meeting, studying how to improve their ministry.

Tour of Church-State Commission—3

Those Unique Yugoslavs

By ROLAND R. HEGSTAD
Editor, Liberty

Yugoslavia, although a Communist country, allows some free enterprise. Citizens travel freely outside the country if they can afford to, and foreign policy reflects the independence of President Tito.

The church, too, enjoys a more favorable status than before the war. Though religious toleration rather than religious liberty describes government policy, much more freedom exists today for minority religious groups than in prewar days, when only four church organizations were recognized and the Orthodox and the Roman Catholic Church used the state to protect their interests.

A church may operate a seminary, as our church does, and academies, as do the Orthodox and the Catholic Church. (God willing, our members too may soon have a boarding academy.) A church may even own land and hold title to its buildings—up to 40 hectares (about 90 acres) for each local congregation.

Another paradox of this Communist land: If our leaders were to apply for aid from the state to build our academy or repair our churches, likely they would get it. Other faiths receive a variety of forms of aid—mostly to help establish needed church buildings and to repair old ones, to subsidize clergy salaries, and so forth.

Our leaders, however, have not asked for help—wisely, I believe. Individual sacrifice, which characterizes our Yugoslavian Church, and a wholesome regard for the maximum of independence available have dictated their course.

The policy that churches may receive aid from the government, and the excellent selection of Adventist literature printed for our church on government presses (there are none other) surprised most members of the Church-State Study Commission, particularly those who knew Yugoslavia only by newspaper accounts.

With Our Leaders

You would have enjoyed sitting in on the nearly two-hour briefing given by our Yugoslavian leaders in the Belgrade Seventh-day Adventist church, a representative house of worship constructed in the 1930's. With us were the union president, Jovan Slankamenac; secretary-treasurer, Milam Sudarevic; religious liberty secretary, Rados Dedic; editor of publications, Mirko Golubic; presidents of our four Yugoslavian conferences; pastors of the two Belgrade churches; and secretaries from the union office. These workers provided a wide selection of juices for refreshment and endured snapping shutters during and after the interview. (In fact, a number of them, too, were busy taking pictures of our group.)

Contacts with government officials were cordial and helpful. We regretted only that Koca Popovich, secretary of the Communist Central Committee, who had consented to receive us, had undergone a serious operation and was not yet back in his office. On behalf of the commission, I sent him a dozen roses and assurances of our concern and prayers.

At 10:00 A.M. on Thursday, March 28, five of us called on Milo Jovicevic, the slim, esthetic-looking head of the Ministry of Religious Affairs, and one of his four aides, Esad Salispahich, a handsome olive-complexioned Moslem, who is in charge of Protestant affairs. I introduced Pierre Lanares, Southern European Division religious liberty secretary, and the others accompanying us: W. A. Thompson, president of the Allegheny East Conference; John N. Morgan, religious liberty secretary of the Southwestern Union; John V. Stevens, religious liberty secretary, Arizona Conference. Rados Dedic, also with us, was already well known to the two men.

Yugoslavian Adventist leaders show some of the books printed for us on government presses. From left: Rados Dedic, religious liberty secretary; Jovan Slankamenac, union president; Mirko Golubic, editor of publications; and translator, Nikola Strahinic.

For nearly two hours we discussed relations between the Yugoslavian Government and the church. Mr. Jovicevic, a former professor of Yugoslavian culture and literature, was candid: "Our laws are still evolving," he told us. "We have not yet arrived at the ideal, but we are making progress." That progress, as we have noted, is substantial.

On Friday, in response to my invitation to be the guest of Liberty magazine at a banquet, Mr. Jovicevic, Mr. Salispahich, and their proficient interpreter, Branka Jajich, joined our group at the Hotel Majestic. Also present were the leaders of the Adventist Church in Yugoslavia. Mr. Jovicevic personally greeted each of the 34 members of the commission.

Apart from the good food and fellowship, I recall especially two bits of conversation. One was Mr. Jovicevic's explanation of why Mr. Salispahich, a Moslem (there are nearly 2.5 million in southern Yugoslavia), handled Protestant religious affairs.

"We chose him, not for his knowledge of these matters, which he has," said Mr. Jovicevic, "but for his quality of mercy. If he loses this, he will no longer be of use to us in the Ministry of Religious Affairs."

Sabbath Absences Excused

This was Mr. Jovicevic's way of emphasizing again that what the law may not in its literal sense permit, the heart may arrange. Examples would be the ministry's approach to Sabbathkeeping problems of Adventist school children and Sabbath work problems of Adventist employees. Though no law requires teachers to accommodate pupils absent on Sabbath (the school week is six days in Yugoslavia), Mr. Jovicevic has instructed school superintendents to overlook absences. Only on the high school level, which is not compulsory, do our youth have serious problems, and many of these, too, are solved on the personal level.

As to Sabbath work, problems exist in various industries as they do in most countries. But here again the quality of mercy Mr. Jovicevic referred to has tempered law. For example, an Adventist woman heads a department in the Belgrade post office and faithfully observes the Sabbath.

We told Mr. Jovicevic of the excellent accommodation made for Adventist employees of government in Italy (REVIEW, May 30) and of recent legislative moves in the United States to meet the problems of Sabbath observance of minority groups.

The other incidental information of interest came from the interpreter, Branka Jajich, a comely young woman in her late twenties, who told us that her mother-in-law, "a very wise woman," is a Seventh-day Adventist. She was interested in the Church-State Commission, its relationship to the Seventh-day Adventist Church, Andrews University, and the International Religious Liberty Association (IRLA). She asked also who financed the commission and the IRLA. We told her—and through her, others—of our plans to report the commission's conclusions to the appropriate committee of the United Nations, which this year is celebrating the twentieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. She expressed pleasure at learning that Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Dr. Albert Schweitzer had served as honorary presidents of the IRLA.

(An irrelevant note for gourmets: Our menu was, as everywhere, vegetarian. We gave our guests the option of another menu, but Mr. Jovicevic said, "I wish to eat Adventist food"—a good practice, I am sure, for all of us.)

On Thursday afternoon Leif Tobiasen, professor of political science and history at Andrews University; Rados Dedic, Yugoslavian religious liberty secretary; John Stevens; and I met for an hour's conversation with Marko Nikezic, Foreign Minister of Yugoslavia. Our discussion ranged far beyond religious liberty topics. Let me say only that on such a subject as Vietnam, Mr. Nikezic, who was for four years ambassador to the United States, made no hard thrusts. He was—as we have found other Yugoslav officials to be—considerate, erudite, and pragmatic in his interpretation of world conditions.

Mr. Dedic had not previously met Mr. Nikezic, who reminisced with him after I mentioned that Mr. Dedic had been associated with Tito and Koca Popovich in the partisan warfare that created the modern Yugoslavian state.

After leaving Mr. Nikezic's office we met with Vita Petkovich, president of the Serbian Commission for Religious Affairs, and a friend of Mr. Dedic. Mr. Dedic told us of a recent Sabbath work problem quickly solved by Mr. Petkovich, who "educated" a factory manager.

On our appointments, John Stevens, religious liberty secretary of Arizona, was especially helpful, for he is of Yugoslavian extraction and speaks the language. (Since Yugoslavs questioned by him often replied in English, we are sure that his speech must have an American accent!)

To sum up: Yugoslavia is, indeed, an exceptional nation whose leaders have demonstrated an unusual degree of independence, practicality, and sagacity. Our Adventist leadership, too, exhibit these qualities, which they combine with devotion to the cause of God.

Separation of church and state in Yugoslavia does not mean what it does in the United States. Religious rights are not "unalienable," as the American forefathers defined them, but simply one of many rights, all of which are interpreted to varying degrees, within the context of national objectives and national unity. But increasingly these rights are being shielded by constitutional fiat. What religious rights lack in legal definition and protection, they may find in that commendable quality of mercy demonstrated by such men as Mr. Jovicevic and his associates.

And whatever else we may have anticipated asking during our short visit to Yugoslavia, we did not anticipate the hesitant question with which one member of the commission confronted Mr. Jovicevic after learning of the many forms of financial aid given religious groups by the government:

"But, sir, don't you think, in the interest of church-state separation, it would be better if you did not help the church so much?"

Mr. Jovicevic agreed.

(Continued)

Journey to the Far East

Part 3

By D. A. DELAFIELD
Associate Secretary
Ellen G. White Estate

The high light of my trip was the Far Eastern Division workers' meeting in Fraser's Hill in Malaysia, the first such council ever held. In the remote mountains of this tropical paradise we spent five days in council and recreation. I was assigned two or three meetings a day.

Mission leaders under the direction of Paul Eldridge, H. W. Bedwell, and H. D. Johnson took a long look at the relevance of the Ellen G. White counsels to mission life and the needs and challenges of the unentered lands of earth. As we met morning by morning and evening by evening, we examined the Spirit of Prophecy messages that relate to personal life and victory over sin. The Spirit of God refreshed us with His presence. A spirit of dedication swept over each worker.

And what an environment for a meeting of this kind! The green hills, 4,000 or 5,000 feet high, were blanketed with

New Chapel in Austria

Bogenhofen Seminary, in Austria, inaugurated its new chapel November 4, 1967.

On the ground floor are the library and several classrooms. The chapel itself is on the upper floor. Gilbert Dalais, a pastor in Paris, was the architect.

Bogenhofen Seminary, with an enrollment of 78, is full to capacity.

W. A. WILD, Secretary
Southern European Division

tropical foliage. Within a few miles, in the thick of the tangled forest, jungle tigers prowled, and nearby exotic tropical birds, such as the fire-tufted barbet and mountain minivets, sang their songs and flashed their crimson and green colors in the sunlight.

Early on Sunday morning, February 25, Elder Eldridge drove me to the airport at Kuala Lumpur—KL as it is called by Malaysians.

The Journey Homeward

The next stop was at Penang, really my first stop en route home. The Seventh-day Adventist hospital, located in this vacation paradise, is directed by Dr. R. F. Hann. A staff of competent physicians assists him. This includes F. A. Mote, son of a former president of the Far Eastern Division. I found that the sons and daughters of missionaries in the Far East are inclined naturally to mission service themselves. Another example: R. S. Watts, Jr., Sabbath school secretary of the Far Eastern Division and son of a General Conference vice-president.

On February 26 I flew on to Bangkok, Thailand, exquisite city of golden Buddhist temples and the center of government for the Thai peoples. Here I was reminded how low America's moral image is in the thinking of many Oriental peoples. The taste of Americans for sex and for shady movies and inordinate love and carnal pleasure is open to the view of the non-Christian world. Indeed, these bad habits too often are copied by the Easterner.

One of the great problems that Christian missions face in the Orient is the paradox that exists between the pure religion of Jesus that Westerners generally espouse and their controversial and hypocritical behavior. It is hard to make a Christian out of a Buddhist, whose moral principles may be higher than those of his "Christian" associates. Why should he change his religion when his gods have done a better job of making him pure and good than has the God of the American or European?

But the lives of many Seventh-day Adventist servicemen and laymen in the Far East provide the Buddhist with an opportunity to see how Christians whose "walk agrees with their talk" have something better to offer. And we are seeing encouraging conversions to Christ in the Far East, yes, even in Buddhist Thailand. I held eight meetings in Bangkok, most of them at the Ekamai School on the outskirts of the city, three at our big sanitarium, located in the heart of this fabulous city. The spiritual work of the Bible teacher, John Harris, and his wife, in that mission school, permeates the institution. There have been many baptisms.

Never in my life have I visited a medical institution where the patients, both European and Thai, come in numbers that press the facilities of the place so heavily. The fame of the Adventist hospital in Bangkok is worldwide. This is no accident, for the institution can boast a staff of specialists second to none anywhere in the Orient.

One thing that impressed me about the sanitarium was the school of midwifery, a charge of Gertrude M. Green, a veteran nurse. Her graduate nurses deliver the babies and care for them after birth. This service is free. The news of this benevolence has spread far and near in Thailand. The midwifery school is a model operation, recognized by the government and highly esteemed by Thais.

I made my way through a small waiting room literally packed with young mothers (and some not so young) and their babies. I thought of the good will engendered by this service of love. Here is medical missionary work literally in the most productive form. If Ellen G. White were alive, this scene would bring tears to her eyes. Her heart would rejoice at the fruitage of her counsels on benevolence, calling for just such Christian service.

I flew on to Calcutta, India. I was four days in that city of 7 million people. Here we have a membership of only about 60 and a tiny school of about 20 children. The needs of India gripped my heart. The smoke of scores of thousands of little fires fill the air. Multitudes are huddled together in that expansive metropolis, some of whom live in extreme poverty.

There are frequently good reasons for Oriental suspicions of the West. The danger is that India shall withdraw in its halting, doubting attitudes toward Christians and repudiate the message of Christ entirely. Only the power of God is sufficient to bring to the half billion Hindus and Moslems and millions of Sikhs and Jains the saving power of the Christian faith.

My work in Calcutta was limited to three or four meetings in the church. The workers there are undaunted in their efforts to reach others with the gospel. D. T. Hammond, pastor of the local church, conducts regular Sunday night meetings, and Peter Cooper, ministerial association secretary of the Northeast Union, began a series of evangelistic meetings the very night I spoke in the Calcutta church. The attendance was excellent, so I was told.

Brief Stop in Beirut

My next stop was Beirut, Lebanon. The route of the plane took us over vast desert regions and over Teheran in old Persia. The beautiful mountains surrounding the city were laden with a heavy mantle of snow. For hours we flew over the stretching desert and the vast mountain chains of this historic country. Thirty-five thousand feet below history was made in the battles of ancient kings and warriors.

At Beirut I spent only one night. In the evening I spoke to the student body and faculty of Middle East College and the Middle East Division staff. Beirut is the center of our work in the Arab world. The college is situated in the hills that surround Beirut—a truly beautiful spot.

The next morning I went on to Rome, then stopped to spend the night in Madrid, Spain. The new religious freedom that has cheered the outlook of the church there struck me forcibly. I preached in the evening in our neat Madrid church on the subject "Christianity Versus Atheism." The building was full. A number of non-Adventists had come to attend the meeting. The youth sponsored the service.

Seated in the front row were a number of Spanish young people who were strangely like some of the young people I had seen in San Francisco and New York—hippies all of them, with long hair and faraway look. These hippies really listened to the message. Perhaps two or three of them will be won by our youth and enroll someday at one of our colleges in Western Europe.

Churches Needed in Spain

In Spain our people feel that the day of opportunity has come. They appealed to me to ask the American churches to help them as never before to carry on a larger work. They need money to print more books. "Dólares quitan dolores," they say. This means literally: "Dollars take away our pain." They need money to help build churches over most of the Iberian Peninsula.

The Spanish publishing house hopes to have The Desire of Ages printed in Spanish—20,000 copies! True, The Desire of Ages in Spanish can be imported from the Pacific Press, but such books, imported, can only be used among Adventists. If they print The Desire of Ages in Spain, however, they can sell it to non-Adventists. And thus the colporteur work will take on new impetus.

My last work on this 100-day journey was done in Lisbon, Portugal, where I conducted two services, a night meeting in our large church in the capital city and a meeting the next morning with the workers who serve in the union office in Lisbon. Our laymen also came to join in the service. My emphasis was prophetic in nature: "The Gift of Prophecy in the Advent Church."

When we think of Lisbon our minds turn to Revelation 6:12—John's prophecy of the mighty earthquake that preceded the Dark Day and the falling of the stars. This sign of Christ's second coming was fulfilled on November 1, 1755, and centered at old Lisbon. As I visited the city my mind went back to Mrs. White's comments on this devastating temblor that shook Western Europe and leveled the grand old city. (See The Great Controversy, pp. 304, 305.) The Catholic cathedral still stands; that is, portions of the walls remain to testify to the earth-shaking power of that catastrophe.

On this journey I found that Adventists in Europe and the Far East are dedicated to bringing to the world the good news that Christ is coming soon! The Spirit of Prophecy is helping to keep the Advent hope alive in the hearts of our workers and people. I was glad to be able to make the trip and to encourage and help to build greater confidence in God's prophetic guidance in the remnant church.

(Concluded)

While lasting peace among nations will not be achieved as long as time remains, nevertheless, peace is possible for each individual.

Christ came to bring peace; He will come again to bring peace. At His first coming He brought inward peace, peace to the heart; at His second coming He will complete His task and bring outward peace to the universe. Those who accept His peace in the heart now, will dwell forever in that great peace that will at last settle over the universe.

Christ's first coming brought peace only to some. At one time He said, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matt. 10:34). And sadly, and paradoxically, peace in the heart sometimes brings discord into the life. For the Saviour went on to say, "I am come to set a man at variance against his father and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter in law against her mother in law" (verse 35). And often the acceptance of Jesus Christ by one member of the family has set other members against him. But that peace, so strange to the world, may still be in the heart of him whose love for Jesus outweighs all other earthly considerations.

The world continues to tread a road on which so often peace is glimpsed only as a mirage. The Christian treads a road on which he carries his peace with him, and at the end that peace will merge with the peace of heaven.

T. A. D.

WHAT CAUSED THE DARK DAY?

A reader sent us a clipping from the Action Line column of the Dayton Journal Herald, on which appeared a question asking for a sensible cause for the unusual darkness on May 19, 1780. This was followed by a meteorological explanation of the phenomenon. The reader says, "I would like to hear your comments on this as it does have a bearing on the teaching we have about the Dark Day."

We quote the answer given in the Dayton Journal Herald: "About May 1, settlers around Ticonderoga, Lake Champlain, and along the Canadian-New Hampshire border started large fires to clear farm land. Soot fell all over southern New England. One New Hampshire river had six inches of scum on it. What happened next was that smoke rose under a layer of clouds. Under the smoke, another level of vapor came in from the sea. Then, more smoke rose and still another level of ocean fog formed. Between 9 A.M. and 2 P.M. on May 19, 1780, middle and southern New England were in darkness—as if someone had turned off the Sun."

The author of this reply does not list the source or sources from which he got his information. But similar explanations were given by eyewitnesses of the unusual phenomenon. For example, in a letter dated May 22, which appeared in The Boston Gazette and the Country Journal, May 29, 1780, the following explanation was given:

Eyewitness' Account

"The Hemisphere for several days had been greatly obscured with smoak [sic.] and vapour, so that the Sun and Moon appeared unusually red. On Thursday afternoon and in the evening, a thick cloud lay along at the south and southwest, the wind small. Friday morning early the Sun appeared red, as it had done for several days before, the wind about south-west, a light breeze, and the clouds from the south-west came over between eight and nine o'clock, the Sun was quite shut in, and it began to shower, the clouds continuing to rise from the south-west and thicken from the thickness of the clouds, and the confusion which attended their motions, we expected a violent gust of wind and rain; the wind however, near the earth, continued small, and it rained but little. About eleven o'clock the darkness was such as to demand our attention. . . . Between three or four o'clock we were out and perceived a strong sooty smell. . . . I found the people at the tavern near by very much agitated, among other things which gave them surprise, they mentioned the strange appearance and smell of the rain-water, which they had saved in tubs; upon examining the water I found a light scum over it, which rubbing between my thumb and finger, I found to be nothing but the black ashes of burnt leaves, the water gave the same strong sooty smell which we had observed in the air; and confirmed me in my opinion, that the smell mentioned above was occasioned by the smoak, or very small particles of burnt leaves, which had obscured the Hemisphere for several days past, and were now brought down by the rain: The appearance last mentioned served to corroborate the Hypothesis on which we had endeavoured to account for the unusual darkness. The vast body of smoak from the woods which had been burning for many days, mixing with the common exhalations from the earth and water, and condensed by the action of winds from opposite points, may perhaps be sufficient causes to produce the surprising darkness."

Perhaps our reader wonders whether a phenomenon for which natural causes can be found ceases to be a divine sign. This question was raised and answered shortly after the unusual darkness. For example, in a sermon preached May 28, 1780, in Enfield, Connecticut, Elam Potter said, "Perhaps some, by assigning a natural cause of this, ascribing it to the thick vapor in the air, will endeavor to evade the force of its being a sign, but, the same objection will lie against earthquakes being signs, which our Lord expressly mentions as such. For my part, I really consider the darkness as one of the prodig[i]es foretold in the text; designed for our admonition, and warning."—Ibid., p. 317.

Adventists Answer Critics

Facing similar objections, some decades later Seventh-day Adventists gave similar explanations. Not only did critics challenge the Dark Day as a sign; they challenged the falling of the stars in 1833 also.

Referring to attempts to explain away the 1833 phenomenon, Uriah Smith wrote in 1861: "The attempt is made to dispose of the darkening of the sun in 1780 in a similar manner. That can constitute no sign of the end, it is said, because many such events have taken place, in different ages of the world. But the fact that that darkening was connected with particular events, takes it completely out of the hands of our opponents. 'Immediately after the tribulation of those days' (the 1260 years of Papal persecution), or as another Evangelist has it, 'In those days, after that tribulation,' the sun shall be darkened, &c. The tribulation was shortened by the rise of the Reformation, the time arrived for the accomplishment of that prediction and it was fulfilled. Now it matters not if the sun has been darkened a thousand times in past ages of the world, that darkening which was to constitute a sign of the end was to take place at that time, and there it did take place; and being expressly foretold as a sign of the end, no sophistry can explain it away."—Review and Herald, Jan. 29, 1861, p. 84.

Referring to darkness that occurred in Europe in 1783, D. E. Robinson wrote in 1913: "So long as these dark days occurred at the time specified by the prophecy, need we contend that they were supernatural?"—Ibid., July 24, 1913, p. 701.

Summing up Seventh-day Adventist reaction to those who deny that a sign produced by natural causes is valid, is the following from an editors' note in the SDA Bible Students' Source Book:

"Seventh-day Adventist writers have long held that any suggestion of a natural cause can in no wise militate against the significance of the event as a prophetic fulfillment. The time-honored explanation is that seventeen and a half centuries before it occurred, the Saviour had definitely foretold this twofold sign, saying, 'In those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light' (Mark 13:24); and these signs occurred exactly as predicted and at the time indicated so long before their occurrence. It has long been pointed out that it is the fact, and not the cause, of the darkness that is significant in this connection; as also in the case of earthquakes, falling stars, and other events seen as signs of the times. When the Lord would open a path for his people through the sea, he did it by 'a strong east wind.' Ex. 14:21. Was it for this reason any less miraculous? In like manner, to account for the remarkable darkening of the sun and moon or of the falling of the stars as events in nature is not to discredit them as merciful signs of the approaching end of probationary time."—Page 317.

We therefore feel that the reply in the Dayton Journal Herald poses no problems so far as its attempt at providing a natural cause for the phenomenon is concerned. We doubt the accuracy of some of the details, for example that the smoke came from farmers clearing their land. The smoke could more likely have come from forest fires far to the west as demonstrated in the 1950 dark day. At that time forest fires in the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia in Canada covered the Great Lakes, Ohio Valley, and Middle Atlantic regions with an overcast of smoke. As reported in the Washington Post, "The sun was dimmed in the middle of the day over thousands of square miles of the United States and Canada.

"'Chickens and birds roosted in the afternoon. . . .'

"Weathermen said the smoke combined with unusual weather conditions to achieve the particular effect."—Sept. 25, pp. 1, 9.

The six inches of scum reported on a New Hampshire river sounds like an exaggeration, at least the implication that it resulted from the accumulation of falling soot. Whoever replied to the question in the column may have been limited in the time he had for research and probably consulted only one source. Naturally he would not be nearly as interested in the Dark Day as Seventh-day Adventists are.

We refer those interested in a further study of the Dark Day to the SDA Bible Students' Source Book, which on pages 313 to 320 contains a series of quotations on the topic, collected from various sources.

D. F. N.

LETTERS

... to the Editor

[Letters submitted for publication in this column cannot be acknowledged or returned. All must carry the writer's name and address. Short letters (less than 250 words) will be given preference. All will be edited to meet space and literary requirements. The views do not necessarily represent those of the editors or of the denomination.]

PROJECT LIFE

For a number of years, while living in a foreign country, we put aside a certain amount of money every month, and we would give the total once a year as a regular birthday offering. When we came to the United States, we thought about improving our offering system and decided to give one dollar for each year of our lives on the birthday of each member of our family. (Since we are still relatively young the sum is not especially large, but it is a special offering that is in addition to the regular offerings of the church.)

After practicing the new plan for a few years, we thought that we should share the blessing of this plan with others. Too often we give under the stress of emotion, and since human nature is such that it gets accustomed to almost anything, we are moved less and less by emotional appeals—urgent as they all are. If everyone followed this plan, the result would not only be financially phenomenal but also an occasion for reflection and thanksgiving. Little children do not have trouble in matching their age and would wait impatiently to have the privilege of giving more. And to what older folk would another birthday seem too expensive?

If the average age of churchgoers, including the small children, is 25 (and if everybody is faithful), the yearly total would surpass $12 million for the North American Division alone. Different amounts could be suggested for the other fields of the world. Besides, a more affluent person could decide to give $2, $5, $10, or $100 for each year.

Since we all would like to keep counting our birthdays until Jesus comes and since through these offerings, corresponding to the years of our lives, we give in order to make eternal life possible for many more, we suggest a permanent church program called "Project Life."

Funds for the gospel, yes! But blessings to the giver, unending!

A HOPEFUL FAMILY

Berrien Springs, Michigan

STRONG IN WEAKNESS

I cannot tell you how grateful I am for our church paper. I cannot hear the sermons, and very little of the Sabbath school lesson; but I study the lessons and read my church paper.

HELEN E. DAVIDSON

Hamilton, Ontario

HITS MARK

"Is the Message Getting Through?" [Sept. 3] beautifully expressed my longtime concern. I hope this message gets through to everyone in our church.

PAUL E. TALLANT

Boulder, Colorado

EXPERIENCE IS PERSONAL

Thank you for providing a section for letters to the editor in your excellent journal. This creates much interest I feel sure. How true the letter "Doctrines Not Enough" [July 23]. I too had been a member of the Seventh-day Adventist Church for many years with a rather uneven experience, but it was not until I spent three days, and most of the nights also, in prayer and fasting that I obtained an experience with the Lord Jesus, that I shall never forget. God used Steps to Christ, pages 50-51, to give me a joyful experience in the Lord. Shortly after that I began to win souls to Christ. Although I have made many mistakes since that time, they were not made willingly.

E. K. CARLSEN

Norwood, South Australia

JERICO ROAD TODAY

I should like to make a report about my section of the "Jericho Road" [Sept. 10]. I, too, have noticed many who will not be involved. But I notice even more the faces of youth who are going on past Jericho to the kingdom. Many carry loads almost too heavy for their young, weak souls. However, I notice that many of these youth stop to help a lonely person who has fallen on the road, or to urge others, often the aged, to keep moving on to the kingdom.

These children have a Helper who comes along and lightens their burdens. They make wonderful progress when they keep their eyes on Him.

There is another group traveling on the same section of the road. They are so busy watching evils upon the road they don't even notice the Helper, and their burdens grow heavier as they walk. They are so busy correcting, reproving, and condemning that they trip right over people who have fallen in the road for want of love and sympathy.

One or two of these suddenly notice the Helper, and instead of becoming involved with "wedding rings, meat eating . . . mini-skirts, mascara," they begin urging people toward Him, that He may remove these loads that human beings find easy to condemn.

The youth rejoice and, with concerted effort, the weaker young ones and the stronger, wiser travelers take many more people to Jesus, their Helper.

MRS. DAN CAMPBELL

Wenatchee, Washington

DROUGHT again grips Australia — worse than the worst of the U.S. depression of the 1930's"

"Sex-related crimes in the U.S. increase 120 per cent between 1960 and 1969"

"Classic economic theories unable to cope with simultaneous inflation and recession"

Add to these recent headlines the local horror stories of rape, murders, highway accidents, and crippling diseases that march across the newspapers of communities everywhere on this old planet, and you have a dark picture indeed.

Amid the heroic attempts, unsung or publicly lauded, on the part of many to reverse the tide of distress and fear, the uneasy feeling remains that we will be seeing the same headlines tomorrow and the day after.

Yet we all want better headlines.

What headlines would you like to see in tomorrow's paper? "Cancer Vaccine Discovered," "Automated Automobiles Prevent Accidents," "World Powers Dismantle All Armaments," "World Hunger Eliminated"?

And these headlines are yet possible! But would the elimination of such diseases as cancer and multiple sclerosis and the abolishment of hunger and illiteracy be enough? Would man really be any different? Less greedy? Would man be any happier by living until 80 instead of dying at 70? Or by working 30 hours a week instead of 40?

And death is still in front of us, one way or another! What then? Death, no headline in the future will promise to eliminate. Furthermore, what about life with its many unanswered questions and unfulfilled dreams, even modest dreams? Is there any such thing as compensation somewhere in the future for the sacrifices made on earth? Yes, something more than the most hopeful of human headlines is needed!

Those headlines have been written by God Himself. As clear as language can be said, in whatever the native tongue, His promise rings with ever-increasing relevance: "'Set your troubled hearts at rest. Trust in God always; trust also in me. There are many dwelling-places in my Father's house; . . . I am going there on purpose to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I shall come again and receive you to myself, so that where I am you may be also'" (John 14:1-3, N.E.B.).

"Jesus Returns to This Earth." What a headline that will make! It is the only headline that will ever solve such problems as death, human greed, racial distrust, and environmental pollution. Could it possibly happen in our day?

We are not left in the dark as to when Jesus will return. God is not playing hide-and-seek with man. He gives His own headlines as to when men might expect His return.

In fact, in Matthew 24 (parallel passages in Mark 13 and Luke 21) the disciples raised the same question, "When shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

Jesus did not treat the question lightly. Matthew 24 in a better world our lives away

By HERBERT E. DOUGLASS

and 25 is His response to their questions; He spelled out the signs that would indicate the nearness of His Advent and He stressed the kind of people who will be fit to live in His new world.

Headlines Given by Jesus

One of the clearest headlines He gave announcing His return says: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come" (verse 14). God is fair, as well as loving, and the dire consequences that will befall the sinners of earth in the last days will not fall on any man before he has had the opportunity to accept or reject God's invitations to join with Him in making His new world order. The gospel shall be preached! Men will hear and see the evidences of a God who works in behalf of men. One way or another, every man will know that God has spoken to him. Every rebel will remember how often he turned his head from duty, from decency, as he settled down to a life of self-serving. Every man will have this witness of a pleading God. Every man will be without excuse. And "then shall the end come."

In these days of television, Telstar, radio, and telephone there are very few homes anywhere in the world, including the back country of Borneo, the islands of the sea, or those behind the bamboo curtain, that cannot be in instant touch with the rest of the world and with the programs that proclaim the Lordship of Jesus and His soon coming.

Jesus predicted that headlines would be written across the skies foretelling His return. "The sun will be darkened, and the moon will not give its light, and the stars will fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens will be shaken; then will appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven" (verses 29, 30, R.S.V.).

Have we seen this handwriting in the sky? All but the last. All except the shaking of the powers of heaven have become a matter of historical record.

The sun was darkened on May 19, 1780. The light of the moon was veiled on the same evening, and the stars "fell" November 13, 1833. The impact of this brief historical note is that these events happened precisely as Jesus foretold and at a time when their meaning would be most understood.

Many are the descriptions by eyewitnesses of the Dark Day and the shrouded full moon. Timothy Dwight recorded: "The 19th of May, 1780, was a remarkable dark day.

Candles were lighted in many houses; the birds were silent and disappeared, and the fowls retired to roost. The legislature of Connecticut was then in session at Hartford. A very general opinion prevailed, that the day of judgment was at hand. The House of Representatives, being unable to transact their business, adjourned. A proposal to adjourn the Council was under consideration. When the opinion of Colonel [Abraham] Davenport was asked, he answered, 'I am against an adjournment. The day of judgment is either approaching, or it is not. If it is not, there is no cause for an adjournment: if it is, I choose to be found doing my duty. I wish therefore that candles may be brought.'"—Connecticut Historical Collections, compiled by John Warner Barber (2d ed.; New Haven: Durrie & Peck and J. W. Barber, 1836, p. 403).

A Harvard professor, Samuel Williams, wrote: "The extent of this darkness was very remarkable. . . . It seems to have extended all over the New England states. . . . With regard to its duration, it continued in this place at least fourteen hours."—Memoirs of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences: to the End of the Year 1783 (Boston: Adams and Nourse, 1785), vol. 1, pp. 234, 235.

Through the night of May 19, 1780, the moon, like the sun, was veiled from earth. Among the eyewitness accounts we read: "Nor was the darkness of the night less uncommon and terrifying, than that of the day; notwithstanding there was almost a full moon, no object was discernible, but by the help of some artificial light."—Thomas's Massachusetts Spy (Worcester, Mass.), May 25, 1780, p. 3.

Unprecedented Phenomenon

The unprecedented spectacle of the "falling stars" on November 13, 1833, was another heavenly headline read by hundreds of thousands.

The trained eye of Denison Olmsted, an astronomer, gave credence to his report: "The morning of November 13, 1833, was rendered memorable by an exhibition of the phenomenon called SHOOTING STARS, which was probably more extensive and magnificent than any similar one hitherto recorded. . . . The reader may imagine a constant succession of fire balls, resembling sky rockets, radiating in all directions from a point in the heavens, a few degrees south-east of the zenith, and following the arch of the sky towards the horizon. . . . [They] began to attract notice by their unusual frequency or brilliancy, from nine to twelve o'clock in the evening, were most striking in their appearance from two to five, arrived at their maximum, in many places, about four o'clock, and continued till rendered invisible by the light of day."—The American Journal of Science and Arts, 25 (1834), pp. 363-386.

But Jesus not only predicted great wonders in the heavens, He also headlined conditions on earth. These predictions, if written a century ago, would have been laughed off as the babbling of a crackpot—but not so today.

Continuing in the same sermon in reply to His disciples' question regarding the signs of His return, Jesus said: "'Nations will stand helpless, not knowing which way to turn'" (Luke 21:25, N.E.B.).

A century ago, even 50 years ago, the world's leaders were contagiously optimistic regarding the perennial problems of society. They saw progress on every hand and they read into this technological leap into the future the solution to the problems that befuddle mankind. Their motto was "Every Day and in Every Way We Are Getting Better and Better."

But today, any optimism in the face of the dilemmas confronting modern man on every continent is at best guarded and wishful. In the late summer of 1970 at Aspen, Colorado, a group of 75 distinguished scientists, economists, historians, and philosophers "reached the melancholy conclusion that modern technology, greedy men and complacent or inefficient governments are debasing human values, ruining the quality of our environment, and threatening the future of a decent and civilized world."

Regardless of where each man would put the blame or what he would consider was the chief problem, they "all insist that the human family is approaching an historic crisis which will require fundamental revisions in the organization of society."

How to go about applying remedies, however, is where agreement ended. "On the means of achieving even the minimum goals of a livable diet for all men, clean air and water, and reasonable security from death by curable disease or war, there has been in this conference a babble of disagreement."

Many participants saw the inner connection of all human problems: "therefore, a whole new system of world controls must be devised."—JAMES RESTON, New York Times, September 2, 1970.

The most informed minds, the most dynamic movers of world thought, stand "helpless" before the conflicting national and international goals that all clamor for immediate attention. The dilemma of economics in a world without cheap labor, colonies and new frontiers, of pollution in a world that consumes its natural resources at a voracious pace with much residue waste, of race relations wherein the dark-skinned races of the world far outnumber the white in the race for equality and power, of the individual who wants to live his own life style yet is forced by the pressure of others to mix into a faceless pluralistic melting-pot society—all these predicaments pose as insoluble problems before world leaders, "not knowing which way to turn."

Jesus continued: "Men will faint with terror at the thought of all that is coming upon the world" (Luke 21:26, N.E.B.). All who read current literature and listen to their radios and televisions are aware of the pleas by biologists, economists, chemists, theologians, physicists, and others that unless we change drastically our modern pattern of living, civilization has had its last chance.

Men who are not in the habit of making extravagant or rash statements talk about the end of the world in from ten to 30 years. For example, George Wald, Nobel prize-winning biologist at Harvard, was quoted recently as saying that life on earth is threatened with extinction in the next 15 to 30 years (Louisville Courier-Journal, Feb. 5, 1970).

The Christian's Task

What is the Christian supposed to do when such conditions plague the earth? Did Jesus give us any counsel? Much in every way.

First, "When all this begins to happen, stand upright and hold your heads high, because your liberation is near. . . . When you see all this happening, you may know that the kingdom of God is near" (Luke 21:28-31, N.E.B.). The Christian does not fear the future. Neither does he scorn the past or ignore the present. He knows that the present predicament of the world has not caught God by surprise. Atomic bombs capable of destroying all life in minutes, intrigue and crime on all sides, insoluble problems of population explosions and pollution—all this has not presented God with a problem that He cannot cope with. He saw it coming. He saw the present world predicament as an inevitable consequence of human rebellion in the face of His laws for life and happiness. His solution is man's only solution. Jesus will remake this earth into a world where "He will wipe every tear from their eyes; there shall be an end to death, and to mourning and crying and pain; for the old order has passed away!" (Rev. 21:4, N.E.B.).

Second, Jesus reminds all men who seek peace and justice: "He who endures to the end will be saved" (Matt. 24:13, R.S.V.). There is a quality control on the better world that Jesus has promised to all men. Not all men will get into Christ's better world, because not all are demonstrating their compatibility with its principles. They wouldn't be happy there, and that would never do. Those who are one day ushered into God's new world order will have reflected on earth their oneness in purpose with Him. Therefore, "take heed to yourselves lest your hearts be weighted down with dissipation and drunkenness and cares of this life, and that day come upon you suddenly like a snare; for it will come upon all who dwell upon the face of the whole earth" (Luke 21:34, R.S.V.).

The return of Jesus—what a day to look forward to! But, thank God, Christians do not face the future as Don Quixote, who sings about dreaming "the impossible dream," fighting "the unbeatable foe," bearing "unbearable sorrow," and running "where the brave dare not go." The song has Don Quixote lamenting "This is my quest, to follow that star, No matter how hopeless, no matter how far."

Truly, the most impossible dream—the dream without a chance of fulfillment—is to think hopefully of the future and yet to leave the second advent of Jesus out of the picture. The problems of this world are indeed the "unbeatable foe" without Jesus in a man's life today. Jesus alone can give a man perspective and personal strength to endure and to lend the world a helping hand during this holding time, waiting for Christ's return.

Restoration of Loved Ones

Christians do not carry an "unbearable sorrow," nor do they follow a quest that is hopeless as they walk toward Christ's better world. Much to the contrary. Listen to Paul: "You should not grieve like the rest of men, who have no hope. We believe that Jesus died and rose again; and so it will be for those who died as Christians; God will bring them to life with Jesus.

"For this we tell you as the Lord's word: we who are left alive until the Lord comes shall not forestall those who have died; because at the word of command, at the sound of the archangel's voice and God's trumpet-call, the Lord himself will descend from heaven; first the Christian dead will rise, then we who are left alive shall join them, caught up in clouds to meet the Lord in the air. Thus we shall always be with the Lord. Console one another, then, with these words" (1 Thess. 4:13-18, N.E.B.).

When Jesus comes, grassy plots the world over will give up their dead; the oceans of the world will release the thousands who there found their last resting place. Fathers and mothers with sons and daughters once more; lovers cruelly separated, now reunited—what a day! Those arms will hug you again, those eyes will dance as before. So many of man's hopes and dreams are early dashed to the ground by circumstances or death. So many friendships are split by a funeral. But when heaven's paratroops unlock the graves of earth, all things good and lovely are reunited—the future is open without end.

The lilting theme song of the General Electric Exhibit at the 1964 New York World's Fair was "There's a Great, Big, Beautiful Tomorrow." It introduced a dazzling portrayal of the electronic world of the near future; its promise of comfort and excitement seemed so attainable.

But the beautiful world of tomorrow will not come off the assembly lines of General Electric or Yamaha or Telefunken. Only the Christian can say with confidence that "there's a great, big, beautiful tomorrow," and only because Jesus has said it first.

Our task is simple: Listen to Jesus speak to your hearts. He may speak through a friend, perhaps through the words that you are now reading; you may find Him in the words of Matthew or Luke or Paul. But if you seek for Him with all your heart, He will answer in ways that you will understand. In fact, you would not feel your need to seek Him if He were not already speaking to you. Keep listening to Him, for He wants to walk with you all the way into the better world He will soon set up. ♦♦ they believe we are having the last message of mercy, give way to their natural feelings, and barter, and trade, and are a proverb among unbelievers for their keenness in trade, for being sharp, and always getting the best end of the bargain." —Testimonies, vol. 1, p. 150.

Another inconsistency that Spurgeon deplored was the lack of love among members in the church. He says: "Tell the worldly man that Christians love each other. 'Ah,' says he, 'You should go over to Ebenezer or to Rehoboth and see how they love each other. They can scarcely hold a church meeting without abusing each other. You tell us that we bite and devour one another and that our wars and fightings come from our lusts. Where do your wars and fightings come from?'"

Sister White says: "In the church of God today brotherly love is greatly lacking. Many of those who profess to love the Saviour neglect to love those who are united with them in Christian fellowship."—Ibid., vol. 8, p. 242.

Charles Spurgeon also pointed out that the lack of joy among church members contradicted their claim that Christ imparts happiness to His followers. He pictures the unbeliever as saying: "'Why just look at these saints, they never seem to have peace or joy. They talk constantly of their trials and troubles. They never seem to have much happiness. I don't want to be a Christian,' says the worldling, 'why should I pluck the sunbeam from my eye and take the smile from my brow?'"

Cheerfulness Is Not a Sin

Regarding lack of joy, Ellen White says: "We are not to make crosses for ourselves, by wearing sackcloth. . . . [We are not] to go mourning up the hill of Christian life, feeling it is a sin to be cheerful, contented, happy, and joyful. These are all self-made crosses, but not the cross of Christ."—Ibid., vol. 4, pp. 626, 627.

If our religion is to be a blessing and not a curse to our fellow men we must follow the example of Christ, not only in one or two respects but in every detail.

"Was Christ self denying? so must you be. Was He meek and lowly? so must you be. Was He zealous in the work of saving souls? so must you be. Did He labor to promote the glory of His Father? so must you. Did He often seek help from God? so must you. Was Christ patient? so will you be patient. As Christ forgave His enemies, so will you forgive." —Ibid., vol. 5, pp. 160, 161. □

For the Younger Set

A Special Day

By MARYE TRIM

SIX-YEAR-OLD Lynne opened her eyes. Then she shut them tight, for the early morning was dark and cold. She pulled up her blanket and curled into a warm ball. But then she blinked open her eyes again. Someone was moving about in her bedroom. She saw in the dim light that it was Dawn, her sister, and she was getting dressed.

"Are you getting up this early?" asked Lynne.

Dawn switched on the light and came over to Lynne. "Yes, I am. Today is a special day, and if you want to see something very special you'd better get up too."

"But it's cold out there, and it's dark."

"And it's going to grow darker yet, even though it is daytime," Dawn told her. "You'll see."

"What do you mean?" asked Lynne. "How can the day get darker when the sun comes up?"

"Ha! You've forgotten, haven't you! Today is the eclipse of the sun; this morning—soon. Get up!"

So Lynne threw back the blankets. In a little time the girls were both in the kitchen, eating porridge.

"What is an eclipse, Daddy?" Lynne asked. "Tell me again."

"An eclipse is when the sun is covered so that we cannot see it shining," daddy explained. "Today, for the first time in many years, we can see the sun fully covered by the moon. That is called a total eclipse. But we must be very careful to take the proper precautions to protect our eyes from damage as we look at it!"

"Oh! So it is a special day!" said Lynne.

The family gathered in a room that faced the east. Through the window they watched the sun rise. It looked like a ball of red flame. Then, within minutes, they saw the moon begin to cross its path.

"Right on time!" Dawn looked at her watch. "Exactly to the minute that it was forecast!"

Lynne held her mother's hand as gradually the morning light faded. A strange yellow-orange glow crept over the land.

"Isn't it quiet!" whispered

Dawn. "Even the birds have stopped chirping; and the hens and rooster are quiet. And it's all so still!"

"Has nighttime come back?" asked little brother. "I'm scared."

Now the garden outside grew dimmer and dimmer.

"There!" said Daddy. "Total eclipse!"

As the family looked at the sky they saw a thin circle of gold around the outline of the moon, with a glitter of red at one point.

"Ooh, it's beautiful!" exclaimed Dawn. "What is that red sparkle?"

Daddy told her, "That's the planet Jupiter, far far away from our earth. What an amazing sight!"

"It's scary," insisted little brother. So Daddy picked him up, and the family stayed huddled together, quiet and watching.

For two slowly ticking minutes the world outside was dark; then, slowly, the strange yellow-orange light and the outline of the sun began to reappear. Half an hour later only a fingernail shape of the moon remained on the sun. In a while it too was gone. The eclipse was over.

"It made me think of the Dark Day of 1780," Mother told the children. "That must have been something like the darkness we have seen this morning, although that darkness was not caused by an eclipse."

"I know about the Dark Day of 1780. That was a sign of Jesus' coming again!" declared Dawn.

"Will it be all dark like that when Jesus comes?" asked Lynne.

Dawn knew the answer. "Maybe beforehand, but when Jesus comes in the sky it will be dazzling bright, and every eye shall see Him."

"I want to see Jesus come," said Lynne.

"So do I," added little brother. "An angel is going to lift me up!"

Dawn smiled at her brother and sister, "That will be the very best and most special day of all!"

During an eclipse, the sun is hidden by the moon.

love the President of our country? Many think they do.”

Again the answer, “No. I can’t really love him, because I don’t know him very well.”

“Could this be the reason,” I said, “for your lack of feeling of love toward the Father and His Son, whom He sent to be your Saviour and friend?”

Some time after this experience I addressed a congregation at a large camp meeting. Sitting near the front were two middle-aged women who were sisters. The appearance of one suggested the dignity and consecration of a follower of Christ. The adornments of the other reflected little Christian humility. It developed that one was a Seventh-day Adventist, and the other was a successful businesswoman. After the meeting, the church member introduced her sister, who said to me, “I was reared the same as my sister and I should be living the same as she is. I want to, but I don’t feel that love for Jesus that she demonstrates. Can you tell me why?”

After a moment of thought I asked, “Do you love your mother?”

“Yes, yes, of course,” they both answered quickly.

“Why?” was my next question.

“Our mother is a wonderful mother,” the businesswoman replied. “We couldn’t help loving her. She has always been ready to do anything for our happiness.”

“Let us suppose that you had been separated from your mother at birth and had never seen her or heard from her,” I suggested. “Then circumstances brought you together without your knowing who she was. Would you love her as you do now?”

“No, of course not. We’d have to know her better to really love her,” was the reply.

“Then, after you had time to become acquainted and you found that she had all the wonderful characteristics of your mother, do you think you would love her?” I asked.

“Yes, indeed,” they assured me. “To know our mother is to love her.”

“This is true of God,” I followed through. “To really know Him is to love Him, and this applies to Jesus too.”

It seemed that the woman saw the point, for in her next question she wanted to know how to become better acquainted with God. I told her that daily communication through reading and prayer was necessary, but that to me it was also important to give God an opportunity to demonstrate His love. “And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight” (1 John 3:22).

Prayer Is Communion

“Prayer is the opening of the heart to God as to a friend.”—Steps to Christ, p. 93. “Prayer is the key in the hand of faith to unlock heaven’s storehouse, where are treasured the boundless resources of Omnipotence.”—Ibid., pp. 94, 95. Regardless of what the need may be, a loving Father is ready to respond in just the way that is best.

Mother had taught us to pray, but I was not much of a Christian. Our family was poor, and dad had spent money for glasses for me that seemed necessary. One morning my glasses were missing. I did not want to tell my parents, but my little brother knew, and for days he persisted in making me miserable by threatening to tell our parents unless I did whatever he desired. One day a number of us were walking home from school along a country road. My brother was giving me a bad time, and the others were laughing. Finally, in exasperation, I said, “I can pray, and the Lord will help me to find my glasses.”

He continued to taunt and the rest to laugh. While they went on, I knelt down in the dusty road and told my troubles to God. I am certain that my faith was smaller than the proverbial mustard seed, but while I was still on my knees there flashed into my mind exactly where the glasses were. I rushed home and found them high up on a rafter in our hay mow. I had placed them there while turning flips into the hay and then had forgotten them. This was the beginning of a wonderful acquaintanceship with “a friend that sticketh closer than a brother” (Prov. 18:24).

The reason some people find it hard to love Jesus is that they are not acquainted with Him.

These answered prayer experiences have happened to me continually. Perhaps one of the most notable answers made possible my entry into medical school in spite of what seemed like impossible odds. I arrived at Loma Linda with only ten dollars, but with a great desire. A brief visit with Dean Risley made clear that I would have to have $200 to begin school. He suggested that I try to borrow this money, but I had already made every possible contact. Being a graduate nurse, I put on my uniform, went up the hill to the Sanitarium, and began to work. Knowing that unless I did all that I could, God could not help me, I worked while I prayed that the way would open for me to enter school. The day before school was to begin I received a telegram from a young doctor 2,000 miles away. I had not written to him for money. The telegram said, “I am impressed that you need money. Sending two hundred dollars.” On the strength of this telegram the dean permitted a very happy medical applicant to begin school the next day.

Years later as medical officer aboard a heavy cruiser, I hurried to the sick bay to care for a wounded sailor. The excitement of the terrible battle had nearly caused me to forget the danger. While preparing to treat the patient it seemed as though an urgent warning came to me concerning extreme danger and the need to pray. While I worked on the wounded man, I silently prayed, committing myself to the care of the Almighty.

While I worked and prayed there was a loud thump on the side of the sick bay. I gave it little thought, but later when I went up to the bridge to report to the captain, his first words were, “Surg, Almighty God has been good to this ship today.” Then he told me what he had seen from the bridge during the battle. Four torpedoes came streaking toward our ship as we zigzagged at high speed. The first one barely passed in front of us. The next one crashed into the starboard side of our ship without exploding. This was the thump I heard, and it would have destroyed the sick bay if it had detonated. The third one was headed for our midship, but dived deeply beneath the ship and left us unharmed. The fourth barely missed the fan-tail of the ship.

The captain was more than amazed. He said, “I’ve got to send this in my report to Washington, but they’ll never believe it. They will think I have combat fatigue. What do you make of it, Surg?”

Lawrence E. C. Joers, M.D., is practicing medicine and surgery at Jay, Oklahoma.

As soon as I could, I went to my cabin and on my knees told my Father in heaven how thankful I was for the certainty of His promises.

I recall another comforting and inspiring incident that strengthened my faith. This occurred before I had become a physician. I was called home because a younger brother was very ill. I was shocked to find him unconscious and a shadow of his former robust, healthy self. I was informed that he was under the care of two doctors and that they were expected soon. Replying to my urgent questions, they told me that he had typhoid fever and double pneumonia and that there was nothing more that could be done for him. This was before the day of miracle drugs.

Much of that night I knelt by his bed praying and paging through God's Word. I was much impressed with James 5:14-16. When morning came the family agreed to follow this instruction and give God a chance to do what man declared impossible. Because the General Conference was in session, it was difficult to find a Seventh-day Adventist minister to pray for and anoint the sick man. It was late that night when a friend brought an old retired Scandinavian minister, a man of real faith.

When we went into the sickroom my brother's temperature was 105, and his pulse was almost imperceptible. He was unaware that we were in the room. I was afraid that we were too late. The old elder performed his part with confidence and then suggested that each of us who were kneeling around the bed pray. I was the last, and when I finished I hardly dared to open my eyes. Before I could get up, my brother sat up in bed, and with bowed head he said,

Prayed and Recovered

"Our Father which art in heaven,
Hallowed be thy name.
Thy kingdom come.
Thy will be done."

With these words he lay back on his pillow. The angry flush was gone from his cheeks, his temperature was normal, and his pulse was strong and steady. He was so well the next day that I was able to go back to my work. He made a full recovery.

I've walked with Him throughout the years.
He smiles with me, He wipes my tears,
He brings me comfort, stills my fears.
My constant Friend is Jesus.

As years go by I must not stray
To worldly ways in this late day.
Come, walk with me in God's own way.
Come, meet my Friend, my Jesus.

No other friend could fill such need,
No other friend would always heed
A call for help with kindly deed,
No other Friend but Jesus.

When You're Young By MIRIAM WOOD

An Allegory

EVERY now and then one of our readers sends in an original piece of writing that is both provocative and appropriate. Such is the case with the material to follow. Its author, however, insists upon having her name withheld!

REFLECTIONS OF A LONG MIRROR—AN ALLEGORY

I dislike having newcomers gaze at me and remark, "Oh, what a beautiful mirror!" They see only my ornamental frame as I hang here in this hall of a girls' residence home somewhere in the United States.

"What good is a lovely frame?" I ask myself. "I want a picture to reflect, a live, moving picture."

This morning I didn't have long to wait, for two pretty girls came along arm in arm down the hall in my direction. As I expected, they stopped and wheeled about in front of me.

"Janice—that dress really really is too, too short," remarked Pam, the older of the two.

"So what?" and Jan tossed her long dark hair.

"We have plenty of time, so let's try something our dean suggested. I'll be back in a minute." Pam disappeared down the hall to her room. In a moment she returned, puffing, dragging two chairs.

"Now sit down, Jan!" Pam ordered.

"Why?"

"You'll see!" Pam arranged the chairs to face me as she seated herself.

"Jan, there's no getting around the fact that we aren't little girls now and it seems to me we have some responsibility for the way we dress."

"Big deal!" and Jan looked amused.

Pam ignored that as she went on in a big sister kind of way.

"Well, look at your dress. It's at least six inches above your knees, while my own is bad enough. I'm actually ashamed as I look in the mirror. Let's pretend we're sitting on the rostrum, taking part in a meeting. Just look at us!"

After a glance at me, Jan looked surprised. "I didn't realize it was that bad," she commented lamely.

"I wonder whether we wouldn't be ashamed to sit in the same room with Jesus in these dresses. Yet we ask Him to be with us always, everywhere. I wonder what Ellen White would think if she came into our school and saw most of us? When you come right down to it, we're really not modest. And it's ridiculous to pretend that girls don't know what kind of sexual thoughts go through the minds of men. In some ways, this kind of dress is an open invitation to sin."

"Pam, honestly!"

"The shorter the dress, the plainer the invitation—right?" Pam was a pretty girl, now even prettier with her snapping blue eyes.

"I don't agree at all. I wear dresses this length because everybody else does and I don't want to be different."

"But we know that we'll have to be different if we're ready for Christ's kingdom, and we have the responsibility not to make commandmentkeeping difficult for boys and men. After all, I need all the help I can get and so do they."

Janice thought things over for a moment more. Then she dimpled.

"Let's go change into our long dresses. They're pretty and feminine and graceful, and what's more, you can sit down in them with perfect ease."

The girls stood, picked up their chairs, and hurried back down the hall. Their voices faded away.

Here I am alone again. I could have smiled. I could have wept. I could have thanked God for His Spirit that leads hearts in the right direction. But I am only a long mirror hanging on a large wall in the hallway of a girls' dormitory—somewhere in the United States.

Signs, Judgments, and Natural Causes

In our editorial of May 26, we raised the question “Who Brings Disasters, God or Satan?” Are all disasters caused by one or the other? What about those for which natural causes are known? Can these be attributed to either God or Satan? Could a disaster or phenomenon for which a natural cause is known ever constitute a sign?

The reader to whom we referred in our earlier editorial says this, “He [an inquiring intellectual] would point out that hurricanes and tornadoes occur only in certain areas of the world, such as those formed in the Caribbean; that meteorologists can predict days in advance that weather conditions are such before the strike so that the citizenry can defy God’s wrath or Satan’s mischief (?) by preparing for a blow; he would also state that earthquakes occur over faults in the earth’s surface that are known to men, who are approaching a point when they will be able to predict reasonably accurately when earthquakes will occur, and that, knowing where these faults are, they can construct earthquake-proof buildings to withstand God’s judgments or Satan’s harvest of unwarned souls (?)”

Doubtless many intellectuals, and some who do not consider themselves intellectuals, have wondered about the arguments here raised. There is no simple explanation. There is no formula that we can apply and hence be able in each instance to pinpoint the precise cause of a disaster. If the play and counterplay behind human events are extremely complex, how much more complex are those behind events where spiritual forces are involved.

Let us first ask the question, Can an event for which a natural cause is known be a sign? Through the decades of their history Seventh-day Adventists have grappled with this problem and, in general, have come to the conclusion that the question can be answered affirmatively.

D. E. Robinson tackled the problem in a REVIEW article, July 24, 1913. He was responding to a question objectors to Seventh-day Adventist teachings on prophecy sometimes raised, “Why were the signs in the sun, moon, and stars, as foretold by our Saviour, seen only by the dwellers in the United States?”

In his response Elder Robinson presented historical evidence for dark days other than the Dark Day of 1780, naming the one in Europe in 1783, in Canada in 1785, and in France in 1867. Then he added, “So long as these dark days occurred at the time specified by the prophecy, need we contend that they were supernatural?”

After discussing several causes advanced for the 1783 darkness in Europe, such as that it was caused by the volcanic dust from Mount Hecla (in Iceland), or the earthquakes in Calabria, or the earth’s entering the tail of a comet, he drew the following conclusion: “We can only conclude that be the cause what it may, supernatural or natural, these dark days were, like the great darkness which enshrouded Egypt, a manifestation divinely foreseen and divinely foretold.”

He adds, “The same conclusion may be reached regarding the falling of the stars, which was the next sign foretold by Christ after the darkening of the sun and moon.” To reinforce his point, he mentions star showers in years other than 1833, such as the one in 1799 and another in 1832. These, he felt, in no wise diminished the force of Jesus’ sign.

Many years before, Uriah Smith responded similarly to objections critics raised against the Adventist interpretation of the signs in the heavens, mentioned in Matthew 24. He referred to an Adventist preaching service, at the end of which “an infidel doctor got up and explained how it happened that the stars fell at that time. He said it took place according to nature, and consequently there was nothing in it. A Baptist minister who was present, responded, Amen. He said that was right; and that if the falling of the stars in 1833 was a fulfillment of Matthew 24, then it had been fulfilled a great many times since its prediction by the falling of meteors.”—Review and Herald, Jan. 29, 1861.

Timing of Celestial Signs

Answering the objections, Elder Smith said: “The attempt is made to dispose of the darkening of the sun in 1780 in a similar manner. That can constitute no sign of the end, it is said, because many such events have taken place, in different ages of the world. But the fact that the darkening was connected with particular events, takes it completely out of the hands of our opponents. ‘Immediately after the tribulation of those days’ (the 1260 years of Papal persecution), or as another Evangelist has it, ‘In those days, after that tribulation,’ the sun shall be darkened, et cetera. The tribulation was shortened by the rise of the Reformation, the time arrived for the accomplishment of that prediction and it was fulfilled.

“Now it matters not if the sun has been darkened a thousand times in past ages of the world, that darkening which was to constitute a sign of the end was to take place at that time, and there it did take place; and being expressly foretold as a sign of the end, no sophistry can explain it away. So with the falling of the stars. The phenomenon of November, 1833, was the most remarkable of any of that kind on record. It was foretold in connection with the darkening of the sun and moon. And so we find it following right on in that great series of events by which nature herself seems, as it were, to have been appointed to herald forth to mankind the approaching restitution of all things. Infidels and professors may strike hands to explain these things away; scoffers may scoff at our hope; but the glorious day is coming, redemption is nigh. Let sinners tremble; let the saints rejoice.”—Ibid.

In a sermon an eyewitness of the Dark Day made clear that he did not regard assigning natural causes to a phenomenon as invalidating it as a sign: “Perhaps some, by assigning a natural cause of this, ascribing it to the thick vapor in the air, will endeavor to evade the force of its being a sign, but, the same objection will lie against earthquakes being signs, which our Lord expressly mentions as such. For my part, I really consider the darkness as one of the prodigies foretold in the text; designed for our admonition, and warning.”—Sermon by Elam Potter on the “Dark Day,” delivered May 28, 1870, in Enfield, Conn., quoted by W. Barber in The Advent Herald, March 13, 1844, p. 46. See SDA Bible Students’ Source Book, p. 317.

If God wishes to visit a judgment, why should He be prohibited from using natural means? When He opened a way through the Red Sea for the Israelites to cross, the record says, “And the Lord caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea dry land, and the waters were divided” (Ex. 14:21). Why did He use an east wind? Did God’s employment of the wind make the crossing any less a miracle?

It is true that hurricanes can be spotted and their courses plotted. But not everything is yet known as to what spawns them. Also, their courses are often erratic and cannot be predicted with accuracy. We see no problem in supernatural powers triggering a spawning at selected sites at a time meteorological conditions are right, to bring disaster upon a predetermined area. Nor do we see a problem in supernatural powers working with meteorological conditions to steer hurricanes to their intended destinations. In such events an observer could be quite unaware that supernatural forces were involved.

In fact, the supernatural aspects of events often cannot openly be perceived. The Word of God is needed to unveil what is going on behind the scenes. This is also true of human events. Concerning these, Ellen White says: “In the annals of human history the growth of nations, the rise and fall of empires, appear as dependent on the will and prowess of man. The shaping of events seems, to a great degree, to be determined by his power, ambition, or caprice. But in the Word of God the curtain is drawn aside, and we behold, behind, above, and through all the play and counterplay of human interests and power and passions, the agencies of the all-merciful One, silently, patiently working out the counsels of His own will.”—Education, p. 173.

Is there a problem with the thought that someone could protect himself from an earthquake God may send as a judgment by building himself an earthquake shelter? (That among God’s judgments are earthquakes is shown in the following statement quoted in our earlier editorial: “Already the judgments of God are abroad in the land, as seen . . . in earthquakes.”—Testimonies, vol. 5, p. 136.) We see no problem. In fact, one of the objects of God’s judgments is to warn earth’s inhabitants of a coming crisis, in a hope that they will seek God’s salvation. God could permit the life of the builder of the shelter to be spared to give him further opportunity for repentance.

We repeat again, that to the question, Who brings disasters, God or Satan; or are they simply the outworking of natural laws? there is no simple answer. The secular man who does not believe in the supernatural attributes all disasters to natural causes. Seventh-day Adventists, who believe in the supernatural and who found their faith on the Bible as the authentic revelation of a transcendent God, know that both God and Satan bring disasters, as well as that disasters can have natural causes. It may not be possible in any given instance to identify the cause. Generally God allows natural law to operate. This is why scientists can learn these laws and thus predict the outcome of various sets of circumstances in the natural world. But God is not bound by natural law, at least natural law as scientists define it. The Bible predicts that in connection with end events nature will operate quite out of the ordinary. For example, in connection with the celestial signs mentioned in Matthew 24:29, it is said that “the powers of the heavens shall be shaken.”

Ellen White defines the powers of heaven as “the sun, moon, and stars” (Early Writings, p. 41). She says, “The sun, moon, and stars will be moved out of their places.”—Ibid. She says also, “At midnight . . . God manifests His power. . . . The sun appears, shining in its strength.”—The Great Controversy, p. 636.

In fact, according to Luke, it is particularly nature out of its course that will fill the hearts of earth’s inhabitants with indescribable terror.

“Men’s hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken” (Luke 21:26).

Often this verse has been interpreted as referring to fear of war and other calamities currently known to human beings, but the ground of fear is here clearly identified as not knowing what is coming next because nature is all out of course.

Thus, while today, without divine revelation, it may be impossible to distinguish between disasters that come from natural causes and those brought by supernatural powers, the time is coming when both God and Satan will work in marvelous ways as the great controversy reaches its climax. A recognition of this fact is important, so that a person may relate correctly to what is happening and thus place himself on the right side of the conflict that will decide the weal or woe of the living for all eternity.

D. F. N.

“He Went a Little Farther”

By ERNEST LLOYD

It is good for us to be reminded of our need of prayer and our privilege in prayer. We must never forget that the greatest act of which we are capable is the act of prayer—communing with the Creator of the universe, the eternal God and Father of us all. Our greatest example in the prayer life is Jesus Himself. There are about 16 mentions of His praying, as revealed in the four Gospels. One of them is Matthew 26:39. Notice these words: “He went a little farther.”

We may well pause and thank God for this going “a little farther” on the part of Jesus. He did that for you and for me. Will we go a little farther for Him? We may, and we can, and therefore we must. It means life to us to go “a little farther” in our daily Christian experience. Perhaps alone at times. So it was with Jesus. We must get farther away from worldliness, farther away from selfish interests. Then farther into fellowship with our Lord, and farther into personal service for Him, and for others. Let us be determined to go “a little farther” with Him, practicing “the prayer-bent of mind” and making every day one of “working, O Christ, with Thee.”

The Dark Day plus 200 years

The first of three articles that investigate candidly what took place on May 19, 1780.

(See editorial, page 13)

By MERTON E. SPRENGEL

It was midmorning. The clouds were low and dark. Some rain had fallen. Bewildered farmers, businessmen, and others in central New England scanned the sky in consternation. An unusual darkness was enveloping the countryside. Indoor activities were soon suspended as the darkness became almost like that of evening twilight. Farmers left their fields and headed home to a noon meal by candlelight. None could remember a day of such darkness before.

The same eerie blackness was soon to cover thousands of inhabitants of the central New England States of North America. So unusual was the darkness that May 19, 1780, became known in many common reference and historical works as the Dark Day.

For almost 130 years, that unusual Friday blackout has had a special significance for Seventh-day Adventist believers. It has been seen as a literal fulfillment of Christ's prophecy of Matthew 24:29, as well as a historic event marking the opening of the sixth seal of Revelation 6:12.

Since the 1850's scores of Adventist authors have discussed the Dark Day and its significance. While these writers are in agreement as to the fact of the Dark Day and its prophetic meaning, published opinions differ considerably on other aspects. This variance is particularly evident regarding the extent and cause of the darkness.

Some have considered the darkness miraculous or supernatural. Many state that the true cause is not known, or that scientists have been at a loss to explain it. A few maintain that the darkness was caused by ordinary clouds filled with smoke from forest fires. Some claim that the sun or stars were visible during the darkness. Published claims of the extent of the darkness vary all the way from a portion of the New England States to more than half the earth's surface.

Despite their varied opinions, most authors give an impressive array of sources to support their views. The reason for the conflict of opinion seems to be that most have not consulted the primary sources from 1780, but have relied on others' selections from them, or summaries found in post-1780 works. Thus many 1780 facts have been missed, while later speculations and interpretations have become accepted as authoritative. As a consequence, a large number of Seventh-day Adventists hold views about the Dark Day that cannot be substantiated from the 1780 historical record.

In these articles two basic questions will be discussed: (1) How did Adventists in general, and Seventh-day Adventists in particular, come to recognize the May 19, 1780, Dark Day as a fulfillment of prophecy? and (2) What do the extant 1780 publications say regarding this historic event?

The Dark Day affected the populace in different ways. Some saw religious significance in it; others did not. In the newspapers of 1780 these reactions,* among many others, were expressed: "This unusual phaenomenon excited the fears and apprehensions of many people. Some considered it as . . . the harbinger of the last day, when the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light."¹

"The timid view it as ominous; while the more steady and judicious attribute it to some natural cause."²

On May 28, 1780, Elam Potter delivered a sermon in which he expressed his opinion: "Some people, I have been told, were in dismay, and thought whether the day of judgement was not drawing on. . . . For my part I really consider the darkness as one of those prodigies foretold in Matthew 24:29, and designed for our admonition and warning."³

Much speculation

These comments and many others, written within a few days of the darkness, suggest that the phenomenon produced immediate concern among the general populace. There was much speculation as to its meaning and cause. However, other records show that a number of persons were far from panicky, attempting instead to make observations to determine the cause of the darkness.

Historian William Gordon, writing of his experience near Roxbury, Massachusetts, remembers his reaction: "Your friend, having been accustomed to the dark days at London. . . , regarded it with no special attention till called to do it by his neighbors, who were much alarmed.”⁴

Merton E. Sprengel is an associate professor of chemistry at Union College, Lincoln, Nebraska.

* Editor's note: Original spelling and grammar have been preserved in all quotations.

Deryl Leggitt notes that the degree of concern and excitement attributed to those who experienced the darkness is dependent on the author of the account and the time it was written: “Later writers have produced some very exaggerated accounts, none of which appeared in any contemporary papers.”⁵ While doubtless some portions of these exaggerated accounts are true, there is little question that many were written for their sensational effect, or without knowledge of the 1780 source documents.

The contemporary record of the Dark Day in the public press was short-lived. In less than five weeks no new articles appeared. More than half the original material was written within the first week. This is not surprising, since for most of the people the American Revolution was a much more serious concern than a few hours of unusual darkness.

Various interpretations

As the initial fears and apprehensions of the Dark Day abated, apparently its religious significance did also. During the next few decades most Adventist theologians interpreted the signs in the sun, moon, and stars in various ways.

In the 1790’s, Joshua Spaulding considered the Dark Day, auroras, and other sky phenomena as signs of the Advent; but not as direct fulfillments of Matthew 24:29. In a printed lecture he wrote; “To apply this passage fully, even to the present events, would be an extravagance which, of all books, the Bible will the least countenance.”⁶

In 1815, Amizi Armstrong suggested a political interpretation: “The sun becoming black, and the moon as blood, and the stars falling to the earth, designate the shrouding in darkness, and covering with blood, and casting down from their high places, the thrones and dominions, and the princes, and the potentates of the earth.”⁷

Millerite literature of the early 1840’s includes numerous references to sky phenomena such as comets, meteors, parhelia, and auroras as being considered by those with high expectations of the Advent to be signs of its imminence.

William Miller himself listed many signs of Christ’s coming in his published lectures but did not include cosmic events. His interpretations were figurative. To Miller, Matthew 24:29 applied to the destruction of Jerusalem when “the moral sun—the gospel . . . should become obscured.” The moon not giving her light meant that the “church should not spread her light,” and the falling of the stars foretold the “ministers of the gospel . . . falling from the purity of the gospel into antichristian abominations.”⁸

Referring to similar events of the sixth seal of Revelation 6:12, Miller made the following application to the French Revolution: “I understand this to mean in that revolution when the king lost his authority, and tried to disguise himself, and fled from his own subjects, [and] afterwards was beheaded. The queen, too, became blood, and all the nobility of France fell to the earth.”⁹

Other Advent writers of the 1840’s expressed similar political or religious interpretations of the signs in the sun, moon, and stars.

Henry Jones, in 1841, appears to be among the first of the Millerites to propose a literal interpretation of these events. He maintained that meteors, dark days, and auroras were of recent origin and “have every appearance of being altogether as supernatural, and fitted to be ‘great signs’ of such an event, as represented in the prophecies concerning them.”¹⁰

Probably the most influential of those to hold the literal interpretation was Josiah Litch, who became assistant editor of the Millerite Signs of the Times in 1840. Early issues of the Signs contained articles concentrating on signs in the social, political, and spiritual realms, but a number of short references to various cosmic phenomena also were included.

Litch appears to have established his belief in the Dark Day of 1780 in early 1842, when he published a poem with these comments: “The following lines, written soon after the event to which they refer, were handed to us by a friend, and afford a view of the impression of the dark day made on the community at the time. One circumstance is noted which we had never before heard named, vis., the darkening of the moon.”¹¹

Significant lines of the poem read:

“Nineteenth of May, a gloomy day,
When darkness veiled the sky;
The sun’s decline may be a sign
Some great event is nigh.

Let us remark, how black and dark,
Was the ensuing night
And for a time the moon declined,
And did not give her light.”

Litch’s knowledge of the Dark Day apparently was quite limited at this time. The fact that he had not heard of the darkening of the moon before suggests that he was not familiar with at least several of the 1780 sources, since they describe the darkness of the night and its effect on the appearance of the moon.

Less than four months later, Litch published an opinion that shows an apparent advance in his belief. Referring to the darkening of the sun foretold in Matthew 24:29, he stated: “That event did take place on May 19, 1780, and several times since in different countries. That darkness was supernatural, and not produced by an eclipse.”¹²

By this time, Litch had become persuaded that the Dark Day was a supernatural event, as had been previously implied by Henry Jones. Within a few months, other comments by Litch were published by J. V. Himes, Litch’s employer.

“Has the sun been darkened in these days, as predicted by Joel and the Saviour? It has; and that within the memory of many now living. I refer to the dark day of A.D. 1780, May 19th. That was a day of supernatural darkness. It was not an eclipse of the sun, for the moon was nearly at the full. It was not owing to a thickness in the atmosphere, for the stars were seen. The darkness began about nine o'clock, A.M., and continued through the day and also into, if not through the night. . . . Such a day of darkness has never been known, so far as I can learn from history, (and I have searched for it most diligently,) since the crucifixion of our Saviour. There have been several such events since, in different countries. If any can produce evidence of such an appearance before 1780, I will thank them most heartily for the information, and make a correction of this statement." ¹³

Later on in the same work, Litch reiterates his belief that "the sun has been supernaturally darkened from morning to night: in some places it being cloudy, and the sun entirely invisible, and in others it being visible, but having the same appearance as when totally eclipsed, and the stars being visible." ¹⁴

Regarding these and other widely circulated but undocumented views of Josiah Litch, it should be noted that while some are found in the 1780 record, many others are not, or are at variance with it. The implications that the atmosphere was clear, that the stars were visible, that the sun appeared as if totally eclipsed, find no support in the historic record of 1780. There is consistent evidence that the atmosphere was filled with clouds and smoke wherever and whenever it was dark. In addition, the fact that he had not heard of other dark days before 1780 shows his limited knowledge of the subject, since three newspaper accounts of an almost identical 1762 dark day appeared alongside reports of the 1780 darkness. Other sources discussing such phenomena had been published many years before 1842.

The first attempt to document the Dark Day in the Signs was made in 1843.¹⁵ Seven quotations from post-1780 sources were used, with at least three of the authors being eyewitnesses. The sources selected emphasized the effects on the people, while ignoring other aspects of the event. Six of these quotations have been used repeatedly by later authors.

In the decades that followed the great disappointment of 1844, increasing numbers of authors supported Litch's claim of supernatural and unexplainable darkness on May 19, 1780. Woodward lists at least ten writers, from 1842 to 1853, who espoused the supernatural-darkness concept. Little supporting evidence was cited from the 1780 record. At the same time, other Adventist theologians held to various figurative interpretations.

Eerie blackness enveloped the central New England countryside the morning of May 19, 1780. None could remember having seen a day of such darkness.

A longtime proponent of the literal interpretation was D. T. Taylor, an Advent Christian minister, whose early ideas on the Dark Day appeared in the 1840's. In 1871, Taylor described the cause as "cosmic, cometic, and celestial."¹⁶ His 1891 work, The Great Consummation, contained a detailed and extensive analysis of the nature, extent, and duration of the Dark Day.¹⁷ More than 30 sources, dating from 1780 and later, appeared here in Advent literature for the first time, providing what appeared to be ample and irrefutable support of the supernatural-darkness theory. Although Taylor stopped short of expressing the supernatural claim, the circulation of this book doubtless was a persuasive influence in establishing its validity in the minds of many Adventists of various faiths.

However, highly documented as it was, Taylor's book did not go unchallenged. One of his fellow ministers, E. P. Woodward, checking every source as well as researching more than 100 others, published a devastating critique of Taylor's work in 1906.

Woodward's basic approach was to publish the original sources, most in their entirety, while emphasizing in bold type Taylor's selections from those sources. A disturbing bias was thus revealed. Taylor had selected only those portions of the 1780 and later record of the Dark Day that suggested that the events were unexplainable, mysterious, a cause for alarm, or in other ways sensational. It was a persuasive demonstration that the numerous references to clouds, smoke, and other atmospheric conditions, which suggested a natural cause, had been avoided.

In the face of immediate criticism from many firm believers in the supernatural theory, Woodward held his ground and went to press again to refute the critics.¹⁸ In all, he published about 200 pages of material on the Dark Day, which appears to be the most extensive work produced to date.

During this same period, many other religious writers added their opinions. Some opposed the supernatural-cause theory, but most seemed to have adopted it as truth.

The next article in this series will review the development of Seventh-day Adventist beliefs on the Dark Day. □

To be continued

REFERENCES

- ¹ Massachusetts Spy, May 25, 1780.
- ² Ibid., June 8, 1780.
- ³ E. P. Woodward, "The Dark Day," The Safeguard and Armory, April, 1906, pp. 90, 91.
- ⁴ William Gordon, The History of the Rise, Progress and Establishment of the Independence of the United States of America, p. 56.
- ⁵ Deryl Leggitt, "An Investigation Into the Dark Day of May 19, 1780," Master's degree thesis, SDA Theological Seminary, p. 30.
- ⁶ Woodward, op. cit., p. 70.
- ⁷ Amizi Armstrong, A Syllabus of Lectures on the Visions of the Revelation, p. 37.
- ⁸ William Miller, A Familiar Exposition of the Twenty-fourth Chapter of Matthew, p. 25.
- ⁹ ———, Evidence From Scripture and History of the Second Coming of Christ, About the Year 1843, p. 184.
- ¹⁰ Henry Jones, "Lecture on the Signs of Christ's Second Coming Quickly," Second Advent Tracts, No. IX, 1841.
- ¹¹ Signs of the Times (Millerite), May 18, 1842.
- ¹² Ibid., Sept. 7, 1842.
- ¹³ Josiah Litch, Prophetic Expositions, Vol. I, pp. 151-152.
- ¹⁴ Ibid., p. 155.
- ¹⁵ Signs of the Times (Millerite), Oct. 11, 1843.
- ¹⁶ Review and Herald, July 18, 1871.
- ¹⁷ D. T. Taylor, The Great Consummation and the Signs That Herald Its Approach, pp. 234, 235.
- ¹⁸ Woodward, "The Dark Day," The Safeguard and Armory, October, 1906.

FOR THE YOUNGER SET

Mary shares Jesus

By MIRIAM KELLY

Mary liked evening. It was a very special time when Mother read stories and told of Jesus and His love.

"What special thing that happened today would you like to thank Jesus for?" Mother asked Mary after storytime.

"I know!" said Mary. "I'd like to thank Jesus for the fluffy little baby chicks that our big red hen brought out from under the barn today!"

"That is a splendid thing to thank Jesus for," Mother replied. "Is there anything else that you would like to tell Jesus about tonight?"

"Yes, I would like to ask Jesus to help Daddy learn to love Him too. Mother, has Jesus said No to my prayers? I've asked Him many times to help Daddy see that Jesus is his friend, too. But Daddy makes fun of church. He never prays to Jesus; and he swears so much!"

"Mary, Jesus tells us He would like everyone to love Him as you do. You are right to pray for Daddy. Don't stop because you don't see the answer to your prayer. We have to leave the answers to our prayers with Jesus."

Happy to trust Jesus

Mary felt happy to know that she could always trust Jesus.

Mary lived with her father and mother on a farm that had cows, horses, sheep, chickens, and one dog. Each day Mary enjoyed gathering the eggs from the henhouse and, with her dog, Chief, bringing the cows and calves from the pasture to the barn.

One day Salty, their nicest calf, became ill. Mary heard Daddy tell Mother that he was sure the calf would die.

"Daddy, I will pray to Jesus and tell Him. Jesus wants us to talk to Him about everything. Jesus can save our calf if He wants her to get well," Mary said.

Paying little attention to Mary, Daddy went out to the barn to finish milking the cows and feeding the animals.

In the morning as Mary lay in her warm bed, she could hear Mother and Daddy talking in the kitchen.

"Well," said Daddy, "I guess I'd better get out and bury that calf. She couldn't have lived but an hour or so, the way she looked last night."

Mary heard the door close and her father's footsteps on the stairs of the porch and then on the gravel of the path leading to the barn. It was just a few minutes and she heard his steps again, then heard the kitchen door being opened.

"That calf, I can't believe it!" Daddy said excitedly.

"She is up and playing with the other calves just as if she had never been sick! I have never seen anything like that before."

Mary came bounding down the stairs. "Oh, Daddy, don't you see? Jesus has answered our prayer and made Salty well because He loves us so much!"

In the days that followed, Mary noticed that Daddy didn't swear as much and that he seemed more thoughtful. A few weeks later there was a problem on the farm Daddy didn't know what to do about, but instead of becoming angry and swearing, he said to Mother, "Perhaps the best thing for us to do would be to have Mary pray about this."

That evening Mother didn't have to ask Mary what she'd like to thank Jesus for that day. "Thank You, Jesus, for answering my prayer and helping Daddy to know that You are his friend, too."

The Dark Day

Two hundred years ago an impressive darkness covered a large part of the northeastern United States. So unusual was the phenomenon that the date on which it took place—May 19, 1780—has become known as the Dark Day. In a series of three articles (beginning on page 5) the REVIEW is marking the bicentennial anniversary of this event.

The articles have been carefully researched and, in our view, provide an honest, balanced perspective on what actually happened on the Dark Day. They provide information on the extent of the darkness, the intensity of the darkness, the cause of the darkness, and the effects of the darkness. We are publishing the articles with two main purposes in mind: (1) to remind us that Christ's second advent is near and that God has been endeavoring for many decades to call out and prepare a people for that event, and (2) to expand our knowledge, for people who await Christ's coming should be zealous in pursuing truth.

Some readers may feel that, inasmuch as the articles support the theory that the darkness of the Dark Day can be accounted for by natural causes, we are iconoclasts. We are not. We simply are interested in discovering truth. We do not fear truth. Truth never undermines other truth; it strengthens it. Thus, knowing the causes of the Dark Day—whether those causes be natural or supernatural—will strengthen our faith, not weaken or destroy it.

Our attempt to know more about the Dark Day is, we believe, in harmony with the thoughts set forth in the following statements by Ellen G. White:

"Let no one come to the conclusion that there is no more truth to be revealed."—Counsels to Writers and Editors, p. 35.

"Age will not make error into truth, and truth can afford to be fair."—Ibid.

"Those who think that they will never have to give up a cherished view, never have occasion to change an opinion, will be disappointed."—Ibid., p. 37.

"We should present sound arguments, that will not only silence our opponents, but will bear the closest and most searching scrutiny."—Ibid., p. 40.

Part of the genius of Adventism is belief in God's willingness to shed more and more light on His people as they study both His Word and nature. As Adventists we must dig deeper and deeper in the mine of truth.

In drawing the conclusion that the Dark Day resulted from natural causes such as thick clouds and heavy smoke from forest fires, we are not saying that the event was merely a natural phenomenon. We believe that God used these elements to accomplish His purposes—namely, to obscure the sun and lead people to think of God, the judgment, and their soul's salvation. And Bible students during succeeding decades have seen the phenomenon as a fulfillment of Christ's prediction that the sun would be darkened before the end of the 1260-year period in 1798 but after the persecution had ended, which occurred probably around 1755 (see Matt. 24:29; Mark 13:24).

Throughout history God has used the elements of nature to fulfill His will. He used them to destroy the ancient world by flood. He used "a strong east wind" (Ex. 14:21) to open a path for His people through the Red Sea. He sweetened the bitter waters of Marah by having Moses cast a tree into them (Ex. 15:23-25). During the seven last plagues He will shake the world with a mighty earthquake, then will batter down the cities and destroy much of the world's populace by giant hailstones (Rev. 16:21). The elements used will be "natural," but the Cause will be supernatural.

The fact is significant, not the cause

The idea that the Dark Day may be accounted for by natural causes is not new. For many years Seventh-day Adventists have acknowledged this. For example, the 1922 Source Book offered extensive quotations in support of the fact that clouds, smoke, and other elements were involved. At the same time, Adventists have held—and still hold—that it is the fact of the darkness, not its cause, that is significant. In spite of the fact that there have been other days when the sun's light has been partially obscured by smoke or clouds, May 19, 1780, was so unusual that it stands out in history as unique.

The Dark Day was the first of the "signs in the heavens" that Christ said would alert the world to the

HEALTH CAPSULES

Sponsored by the General Conference Department of Health and Temperance

Benefits of breast feeding

By S. L. DE SHAY, M.D.
Associate Director

Recent literature has emphasized the importance of breast feeding. Research data has confirmed the universal superiority of mother's milk from well-nourished women, both for its nutritional value and its anti-infective quality. There are protective antibodies in the mother's milk that are passed on to the child.

Breast feeding affects child spacing and contributes greatly to cementing the maternal-child emotional bond. It can also help keep the mother's weight closer to normal. In many parts of the world there are economic priorities that need to be considered when a mother decides not to breast-feed.

Authorities suggest that the declining pattern of breast feeding is one of the world's most serious nutritional problems. Childhood obesity and milk allergy demand our concern also.

Our wise God provided the best method of nourishing babies.

fact that human history was about to end. The next sign—the moon appearing as blood—took place the same night, and a few decades later the great meteoric shower of 1833 took place. Today signs abound that the second advent of Jesus is near. There are signs in the political world. There are signs in the religious world—the revival of non-Christian religions, the ecumenical movement, the worldwide attention focused on the Papacy. There are signs in the social world—intemperance, divorce, adultery, shameless immorality. With uncanny foresight, God's latter-day messenger wrote: "A terrible picture of the condition of the world has been presented before me. Immorality abounds everywhere. Licentiousness is the special sin of this age. Never did vice lift its deformed head with such boldness as now. The people seem to be benumbed, and the lovers of virtue and true goodness are nearly discouraged by its boldness, strength, and prevalence."

"I was referred to Romans 1:18-32, as a true description of the world previous to the second appearing of Christ."—Child Guidance, p. 440.

Besides the signs foretold in the Bible, conditions are developing that are creating such serious crises for the world that Christ's return has virtually become a necessity. For example, the proliferation of nuclear weapons. Also, the pollution of the atmosphere and of water sources, the population explosion, and the exhaustion of natural resources.

With so many things pointing to Christ's soon return, Seventh-day Adventists do well to heed the Master's counsel: "When ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors" (Matt. 24:33); "Take ye heed, watch and pray" (Mark 13:33); "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28).

K. H. W.

LETTERS Continued from page 2

ful marriage for 57 years, and, thank the Lord, both of us have always felt genuine mutual love.

But, as you know, sometimes "tiny guilts" for words and gestures that were not 100 percent kind and lovely come to mind. When I see my wife now unable to speak a word to me, these little guilts have been breaking my heart and bringing me anguish. But your editorial has been a marvelous help and blessing to me, bringing me courage and assurance of the Lord's tender mercy.

LUIZ WALDVOGEL

Campinas, São Paulo, Brazil

The Adult Friend

When my brother was a small child, Mother sent him to the post office to get the mail. He asked the postmaster whether his Little Friend had come.

Now my parents and brother are gone and I am the only one left, and older than they were. When I go to the mailbox I wonder whether my REVIEW has come, as I feel like it is my friend.

HELEN S. JOHNSON

Loma Linda, California

Weekly manna

As manna, your articles provide weekly nourishment for your readers. The extensive research and Bible treasures presented strengthen our church family with wholesome food for thought. Now, as perhaps never before, the inspired writings of Ellen G. White illuminate Bible truths.

Specifically, Elder Neal Wilson's "This I Believe About Ellen G. White" (March 20) reinforced our faith in the Spirit of Prophecy. It should be pointed out, however, that a technical error needs correction in this article. Samuel is quoted as saying, "'Speak, Lord, for thy servant hears'" (1 Sam. 3:9, R.S.V.). Actually this verse is quoting Eli, not Samuel. Nowhere in the Scriptures does Samuel speak those exact words. (Samuel omits the word Lord.) Ellen White (in Patriarchs and Prophets, chapter 57) explains that Samuel was so awed at the thought of the great God speaking to him that he forgot what he was told to say.

We look forward to many more stimulating and comprehensive articles promulgating the good news for a dying world.

DAN R. GRAHAM

Takoma Park, Maryland

Music communicates without words

Bravo to Ann Cunningham Burke for her "Treat—or Trick?" (March 27). It should be required reading for every Adventist.

Music, without question, communicates without words, and the styles used in the entertainment world have no place in our worship of God. Mrs. Burke's timely article should be heeded lest, as she so aptly stated, "One stand unnoticed among us with a whip of cords."

Christian joy is as high above the joy of show business as the heavens are above the earth.

I pray that there will be manifest among us a humble, teachable spirit, a willingness to learn a more excellent way, a desire for exchanging the cheap and shallow for those things that are deep and abiding.

PAULINE I. COTA

La Puente, California

It takes more than mathematics

Occasionally I come across statements that say, "Statistically, it is impossible for us to reach the whole world with the three angels' messages." This always puzzles me. Have these persons never read the following statement: "If we would humble ourselves before God, and be kind and courteous and tenderhearted and pitiful, there would be one hundred conversions to the truth where now there is only one."—Testimonies, vol. 9, p. 189.

According to this promise, the whole world could become converted in less than five years. Since we know that not every person will accept Jesus as Saviour, the work will be finished in much less time.

If, for purposes of reckoning, we peg our current growth rate at 5 percent, or approximately 150,000, per year, 100 conversions to one would mean that in one year our membership would increase by 15 million to a total of 18 million members. In the second year 90 million persons would be converted, et cetera. By the fourth year (theoretically), we would see nearly 4 billion Adventists on earth!

Thus it will not take long to finish the work. But we must put self aside and allow Jesus to fill us completely with His Spirit and His love. Then we can show the lovingkindness of our heavenly Father to our fellow men, and they will join us in rejoicing in the kingdom.

"Love is the fulfilling of the law" (Rom. 13:10). We may think that we are "commandment keepers," but until we learn to love others as Jesus loved us, we are deceiving ourselves (John 13:34, 35; Matt. 19:17-21).

Through Christ's great grace, power, and mercy, we may become as He is—"kind and courteous and tenderhearted and pitiful." And when this happens, His purpose will be accomplished in us and in the world.

LOUISE MAXFIELD

Nakusp, B.C., Canada

A definite witness

The ADVENTIST REVIEW brings encouragement, inspiration, and the beauty of God's Word every week. My whole family are baptized members now, and my husband of 23 years is attending church with us. I know how much we all look forward to our issue each week, and how hard it is for my husband to wait till sundown Friday night to read ours, which is our custom. Your magazine has been a definite help in stimulating my husband's interest in the Seventh-day Adventists, and for this my four daughters and I thank you with all our hearts.

MRS. V. L. BURDETTE

Loma Linda, California

Seventh-day Adventist views on the Dark Day

Ever since the Dark Day there has been a difference of opinion as to whether the darkness was caused by natural means.

By MERTON E. SPRENGEL

James White probably was the first among the Sabbathkeeping Adventists of the 1840's to write and publish about the Dark Day. In his first pamphlet (1847) he expressed the belief that "the signs in the sun, moon, and stars, have been literal."¹ This statement echoes two concepts published earlier in the Millerite papers: (1) that the fulfillment of Matthew 24:29 was literal, and (2) that the signs already had occurred.

Later, James White published a number of articles containing references to the Dark Day in The Advent Review and Sabbath Herald, of which he was the founder and editor. Some were reprints from the Advent Herald, the successor to the Millerite Signs of the Times. They included a letter written by Caleb G. Adams on May 26, 1780,² and a much longer article by D. T. Taylor.³ Adams' letter gave a clear description of the conditions on May 19, stating that the cause was smoke-laden clouds. Taylor also included Adams' letter in his article.

Sometime in 1853 James White published a book that expanded on the Second Coming themes of Matthew 24.⁴ Of 14 quotations in the section on the Dark Day, 11 were found in Taylor's Advent Herald article, mentioned above, or the first documented Dark Day article in the Millerite Signs of the Times.⁵

Several revisions of this book were published. The earlier editions contained four statements referring to clouds on May 19, 1780, but Adams' letter, which had appeared twice in the REVIEW, was not among them. While James White did not discuss the cause of the Dark Day directly, the four "cloud" references, in context, implied a cause of the darkness.

Between 1850 and 1870, James White evidently became persuaded that the Dark Day was not an event explainable by natural means. In the 1871 edition of his book on Matthew 24, the discussion of the Dark Day was extensively revised. Three of the four "cloud" references were replaced with others not mentioning clouds, and the often-repeated claim that "'the true cause of this remarkable phenomenon is not known'" was introduced. In his own words, James White described the 1780 event as "the supernatural darkening of the sun."⁶

During the latter decades of the nineteenth century, several Seventh-day Adventist authors published materials on the Dark Day that have had an impact on Adventist beliefs. Among the first was Uriah Smith. His work on Revelation contained a series of quotations, mostly from post-1780 sources, in which the major concern was the effect of the darkness on the people.⁷

During this same time several significant articles appeared in the REVIEW. The first of these was by D. T. Taylor, reprinted from the Boston Journal. Most of the content was an extensive summary of 1780 sources, including the familiar claim that the Dark Day was an unexplained phenomenon. However, Taylor was not satisfied with that. He proposed a theory of his own, which finds no precedent in other literature. He claimed that the most likely cause of the darkness was "cometic or meteoric material consuming in the upper atmosphere in the form of cosmic dust. . . . The cause was evidently cosmic, cometic, and celestial."⁸

Claims that it was supernatural

M. E. Cornell, in 1873, wrote that "at the time, the general opinion [was] that it was supernatural. There were no real clouds, or storm. . . . So unusual, so solemn, so clearly supernatural, was the event that it is even now frequently reverted to in the public prints, candidly described, and admitted to be supernatural."⁹

J. H. Waggoner, in 1888, published a different type of supernatural theory.¹⁰ He claimed that the moon was darkened in the evening because it received no light from the sun. This idea, although it was stated in the Millerite and other Adventist literature, finds no support in the 1780 record.

In 1889, L. A. Smith, assistant editor of the REVIEW, published an editorial titled "Infidel Philosophy on the 'Dark Day.'" His view can be seen from the following excerpts:

"The most prominent characteristic of infidel philosophy is its utmost self-confidence. Armed with the mighty weapon of human intelligence, there are few mysteries in the universe with which it will not undertake to grapple, especially if it sees any occasion for disproving the existence of the supernatural. . . . One of its latest attempts in this line is an explanation of the memorable Dark Day of May 19, 1780, showing it to have been nothing more than the result of a little chance acting in unison with some of the well-known laws of nature. . . .

Merton E. Sprengel is an associate professor of chemistry at Union College, Lincoln, Nebraska.

“The memorable occurrence of May 19, 1780, will remain undivested . . . of that mystery which has made it, in the minds of most Americans, an occasion of awe and wonder, and vividly suggestive in its characteristics, of a direct exercise of supernatural power.”¹¹

L. A. Smith’s view includes the “unexplainable” and “mysterious” thrust of many others, merged with the “supernatural” cause that had become so widely accepted by that time. Smith used a number of source materials to support his position, but, as was the case with almost all who made similar claims, no 1780 sources were used.

In 1892, G. I. Butler wrote a series of articles on Matthew 24 for the REVIEW.¹² Comparison shows that almost all of the 30 or more sources he used are the same as those used by D. T. Taylor in The Great Consummation.

Since the 1870’s, Seventh-day Adventist publishing houses have issued at least ten editions of what today is called the Seventh-day Adventist Bible Students’ Source Book. These Source Books have proved to be a valuable aid to ministers, scholars, and others in providing historical support for Seventh-day Adventist doctrinal positions. The second edition, published in 1875, was the first to include quotations regarding the Dark Day. It supported the supernatural-cause theory. A series of Bible texts and 17 historical quotations, including at least two from 1780, appeared under the title “Supernatural Darkening of the Sun and Moon, May 19, 1780.”

I hungered

By GERALD R. STUMPF

*I hungered, and friends denied me;
My empty soul thirsted for love.
I wandered the streets of indifference,
Disregarding the Fountain above.*

*I hungered, and Satan beguiled me;
My lonely soul drowned in his lies.
I struggled in jungles of hating,
Denying the Light in the skies.*

*I hungered, and Jesus supplied me;
My happy soul bathed in His light.
I dined on the Bread, drank of the Wine, Satisfied of hunger that night.*

Among the quotations was Josiah Litch’s much-quoted claim that the darkness was supernatural.

In the 1885 edition, the same quotations were maintained. Two new ones included the popular concept that the cause of the Dark Day was unexplainable. The supernatural claim was softened by removal of that term from the subject title, but Litch’s claim of supernatural cause remained. The revision of 1893 included a two-page introductory statement, which read, in part: “To find a fulfillment of the prophetic specification concerning the sun, we must not look for it in some natural phenomenon. We must seek for this sign in an event that cannot be accounted for on natural or scientific principles. There is one event, and but one, to which we may turn for such a fulfillment of the words of our Saviour. That is the recorded fact of a supernatural darkening of the sun, which occurred on May 19, 1780.”¹³

It is evident, from reading these Source Books, that the early authors and editors believed that the 1780 Dark Day was unexplainable and supernatural. But it should be noted that most of the source material used in support of these concepts was not from 1780.

Supernatural claim removed

In the 1919 revision, however, a significant change was made. The supernatural-cause claim was removed. Extensive quotations from six 1780 sources were included. They contained a wealth of material describing weather and atmospheric conditions on May 19, and for several days before. Accounts were included from people who had made observations of smoke and other atmospheric contents and conditions, in attempts to determine the cause. The editors, evidently feeling that readers familiar with the contents of earlier editions might be concerned, added: “Any suggestion of a natural cause or causes for the darkness can in no wise militate against the significance of the event.”¹⁴

Many of the 1919 Source Book quotations are found in subsequent editions, to the present. The 1962 edition contained additional “natural cause” materials and included the comment that “it has long been pointed out that it is the fact, and not the cause, of the darkness that is significant.”¹⁵ Since 1919, similar editorial comments have appeared, giving less emphasis to the cause and more emphasis to the timing of the signs of Christ’s return.

Of the scores of Adventist books and magazine articles that discussed the Dark Day between 1919 and 1979, only a few took the natural-cause position introduced in the 1919 Source Book and subsequent editions. One REVIEW editorial, in 1967, supported that viewpoint,¹⁶ but essentially nothing more has been written to publicize it.

Further support for the natural-cause position was provided in 1951, when D. H. Leggitt wrote a Master’s degree thesis at the SDA Theological Seminary.¹⁷ It was the first extensive analysis of the original sources on the Dark Day undertaken by a Seventh-day Adventist.

Ever since the Dark Day there has been a divergence of opinion as to whether it was caused by natural means. If the same event happened today, we probably would be faced with the same dilemma. Each of us operates with a different definition of what constitutes a supernatural event. It also is true that what may be considered supernatural in one era might not be considered so in another, because of advances in knowledge. And there is a sense in which all events are supernatural, since God transcends nature and is the First Cause of every event. But it is not the purpose here to draw fine philosophical lines of distinction.

The basic argument for considering the cause of the Dark Day supernatural is that a number of observers in 1780, as well as later spokesmen, asserted that there was no known cause—that science had not been able to explain it, and therefore it must be supernatural. We will now examine the strength of the argument for the supernatural-cause conclusion by considering the most frequently used sources where the claim is made that the cause is unknown.

1. Several authors use part of an editorial comment from the May 25, 1780, Connecticut Journal: "The appearance was indeed uncommon; and the cause unknown." The real impact of this statement is seen when the last part of the sentence is included: "Yet, there is no reason to consider it supernatural or ominous."

2. Noah Webster is often quoted as an eyewitness authority of stature. His statement: "No satisfactory cause has yet been assigned." As I see it, the logical application of this quotation is misplaced, as Webster actually supported a fanciful, volcanic, natural-cause theory of his own.

3. Herschel, considered to be William Herschel, the RESPONSE FROM READERS

A non-Adventist viewpoint on Ellen G. White

Re "This I Believe About Ellen G. White," by the president of the General Conference, Review, March 20:

The article was of particular interest to me. Although not a Seventh-day Adventist, I became acquainted with Ellen White's work 23 years ago while directing the graduate program in speech at the newly created College of Communication Arts at Michigan State University.

Having been impressed personally with her book The Desire of Ages, I ordered from the publishers a copy of the French edition for one of my students to use as a resource reader in preparation for the French-language examination. That student did intensive research for three years concerning Ellen White, including accumulating responses from 350 persons then living who had heard her speak.

All of these responses were collated and analyzed, as were Ellen White's 485 known discourses that were classified by date, text, topic, and place, presented in 82 known cities or towns in ten countries on three continents.

The conclusions reached from that rhetorical analysis were presented to the student's graduate committee—men who represented several academic disciplines and church affiliations. One, who held to no apparent religious belief, might well have been classified as an agnostic, if not an atheist. This particular scholar, who was highly respected by his colleagues, had carefully read the dissertation and had participated with interest in the oral examination.

To the surprise of all of us, he made this comment: "This dissertation represents, among other things, extensive and meticulous research and carefully composed statements of conclusions that can be validly drawn from the data. However, I believe that these data warrant at least an additional conclusion—one that pertains to Mrs. White's 'ethos' or 'source credibility,' much of which stems from intangible factors that cannot always be quantified and much of which was evidently discerned by non-Adventists and Adventists alike. Perhaps a statement to this effect should be added to those already presented as 'conclusions' based upon quantifiable, more obvious rhetorical elements."

Having a high regard for this professor's scholastic research, I (as committee chairman) lifted my pen, handed it to him, and asked whether he would draft a statement that would do justice to this viewpoint. We all waited in silence while he drafted this statement. We read it and endorsed it. This statement can be found on page 558 of the doctoral dissertation "A Rhetorical Analysis of the Speaking of Mrs. Ellen G. White, a Pioneer Leader and Spokeswoman of the Seventh-day Adventist Church." It reads as follows:

"In matters pertaining to effectiveness, perhaps the prime factor in Mrs. White's persuasive power resides not so much in what are commonly called the rhetorical skills, as in her personal ethos. To herself and to those to whom she spoke she was inspired of God. Her prophecies in the past were so fully proved by succeeding events that the people of her church, as well as others, viewed her with great respect—awaiting her words, in later years, with eagerness and concern. In this way, at least, she was unique as a speaker; and the effects of her speaking were unusual."

Those persons who may wish to read the seven conclusions presented by the candidate, Horace J. Shaw, and accepted as valid by the graduate committee, will find them in the libraries of Seventh-day Adventist colleges, universities, and denominational publishing houses, as well as in the Kenneth G. Hance Conference Room of the James White Library at Andrews University.

I would like to add that this Conference Room is the depository for my professional library; and it also houses the 103 doctoral dissertations I directed at the University of Michigan, Northwestern University, and Michigan State University.

(Twenty-three of these 103 dissertations were written by graduates of the Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary.)

Yes, the life and work of Ellen G. White have been viewed—and viewed favorably—by a large number of non-Adventists, many of whom were made aware of her contributions through the dissertation mentioned above.

KENNETH G. HANCE
Emeritus Professor,
Michigan
State University
Adjunct Professor,
Andrews University

Shamrock the donkey

By NETTIE EDEN

Our neighbors, the Johnsons, named their donkey Shamrock because they got him on St. Patrick's Day. With kind treatment donkeys make excellent pets. All the neighborhood children claim a share in Shamrock and take turns riding him. Often two or three ride him at the same time.

The Johnsons keep Shamrock in a pasture of luscious green grass, a real treat for any discerning donkey. But he isn't always contented. One day he sniffed around at the fence, then pawed and pushed until a wire popped. Getting down on his knees, Shamrock crawled through the fence into the big, free world of enchantment. Later the Johnsons found him, brought him home, and repaired the fence. But time after time he broke out and went exploring. Once he got into real mischief. He was romping around in an orchard and overturned a beehive. After a bee sting or two, he ran home as fast as he could and never went near that orchard again.

After many unsuccessful attempts to keep Shamrock in his own pasture, Mr. Johnson thought up a plan. One day he invited the children to watch while he stretched a wire around the fence. He attached the wire to a battery. The children hid and waited to see what Shamrock would do.

Shamrock nibbled grass peacefully for a while. Then with his head held high and his large ears pointing forward, he walked straight toward the fence. The instant his wet nose touched the live wire he leaped into the air, kicking his heels high, snorting, and swinging his head from side to side. He threw his head back and poured forth a raucous bray. The children laughed and shouted hilariously. Shamrock stood still, watched them for a moment, and hung his head as if he were embarrassed. Mr. Johnson removed the wire and battery. Shamrock never needed them again.

Sometimes children too have to be taught not to do those things that will get them into trouble or hurt them. If you ever have to be taught that way I hope you will learn your lesson as quickly as Shamrock did.

British astronomer, by most users of the name, is often quoted as saying that "the dark day in North America was one of those wonderful phenomena of nature which will always be read with interest, but which philosophy is at a loss to explain." After investigating this statement, Woodward was able only to trace it back to a book published in 1876, from which source, or its revisions, all users quote.^{18, 19} Which Herschel is the author of this statement is not known, nor is there evidence that any of the three British-astronomer Herschels ever had anything to say on the subject of the Dark Day. The connection with them seems to be pure supposition.

Another misused statement

4. Another early statement often misused by those who claim that the Dark Day was without natural causes is Samuel Tenney's comment that "no satisfactory solution has appeared." A longer portion of his statement reads as follows: "No satisfactory solution has appeared. But it does not thence follow that none can be given. That it was supernatural, was never supposed but by the ignorant and superstitious: it must then admit of a rational and philosophical explanation."²⁰

5. It is often claimed that science has not presented a satisfactory explanation of the darkness. Since the Dark Day is not a reproducible event, scientists have only the 1780 data to use. The scientists most qualified to make decisions based on that data would be those who observed the event, and who perhaps had opportunity to make some observations of their own. Two such scientists are known. Samuel Williams, professor of mathematics and philosophy at Harvard, and Samuel Stearns, an astronomer, wrote their conclusions in the 1780's. They will be discussed in the next article, but suffice it to say here that both men came to the same general conclusion—that the observed cause of the darkness was identifiable and natural. No other extensive scientific analyses of the event are known, but discussions of dark days, including May 19, 1780, found in a few science-oriented periodicals, record natural causes in view of available evidence.

In the next article we will examine some of the physical events of the Dark Day upon which the natural-cause concept is based. □

To be continued

REFERENCES

- ¹ James White, A Word to the "Little Flock," p. 6.
- ² Review and Herald, Oct. 28, 1852.
- ³ Ibid., May 26, 1853.
- ⁴ James White, The Signs of the Times Showing That the Second Coming of Christ Is at the Doors.
- ⁵ Signs of the Times (Millerite), Oct. 11, 1843.
- ⁶ James White, The Second Coming of Christ; or a Brief Exposition of Matthew 24, p. 37.
- ⁷ Uriah Smith, Thoughts, Critical and Practical, on the Book of Revelation, 1881 ed., pp. 136-138.
- ⁸ Review and Herald, July 18, 1871.
- ⁹ Ibid., Aug. 5, 1873.
- ¹⁰ J. H. Waggoner, From Eden to Eden, pp. 227-229.
- ¹¹ Review and Herald, Feb. 26, 1889.
- ¹² Ibid., July 19 and following, 1892.
- ¹³ Facts for the Times (4th ed., 1893), chap. IV, pp. 65, 66.
- ¹⁴ Source Book for Bible Students (1919), p. 141.
- ¹⁵ SDA Bible Student's Source Book (Commentary Reference Series, vol. 9), p. 317.
- ¹⁶ Review and Herald, Dec. 7, 1967.
- ¹⁷ Deryl Leggitt, "An Investigation Into the Dark Day of May 19, 1780." Master's degree thesis, SDA Theological Seminary, Washington, D.C., 1951.
- ¹⁸ E. P. Woodward, "The Dark Day," The Safeguard and Armory, April, 1906.
- ¹⁹ R. M. Devens, Our First Century, 1876.
- ²⁰ Samuel Tenney, "Dr. Tenney's Letter on the Dark Day, May 19," Collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society for the Year 1792 (Boston: reprinted by Munroe and Francis, 1806), Vol. I.

1780 accounts of the Dark Day

The author examines Dark Day descriptions found in 35 known articles or brief references published in 13 New England newspapers in 1780.

By MERTON E. SPRENGEL

The most extensive eyewitness records of the Dark Day of May 19, 1780, are found in New England newspapers. Thirteen newspapers were in print in the states of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and New Hampshire during May, 1780. These have been examined in the preparation of this article. There were none in Maine, Vermont, or upstate New York.

Merton E. Sprengel is an associate professor of chemistry at Union College, Lincoln, Nebraska.

These papers included 35 known articles or brief references to the Dark Day, of which 14 were original. The others were copies. Ten of the 14 original articles appeared within the first week after May 19. The last appeared June 22. Only three articles from papers in adjoining states have been found. These were copies of reports from the New England papers.

The total original material printed in the newspapers about the Dark Day was quite small. All of it would fit onto two pages of a normal, full-sized newspaper of today. One third of it is descriptive fact. The rest is mainly speculation on such items as the nature of light and the physics of the atmosphere, and personal opinions. In this article I will concentrate on the descriptive facts and observations made during the darkness.

Smoke in the air

Four reports discuss the weather and atmospheric contents prior to Friday, May 19—all in the context of the darkness of the nineteenth. They are the only references to weather conditions for several months and indicate that there was a large amount of smoke in the air.

This report comes from Providence, Rhode Island:* “For several Days the Atmosphere has been remarkably charged with dry, smoky Vapors, so that the sun might be viewed easily with the naked Eye, and Spots on his Disk were very plainly seen through the greater Part of Some Days. The Disk of the Moon, through the Nights of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday last, was of redish Copper Color, somewhat resembling her Appearance at the Time of her being totally eclipsed; there was very little wind, and few clouds were to be seen during these days.”¹

Three other reports originated 100 to 200 miles to the north of Providence. This one from New Hampshire reveals the source of the smoke: “Have also seen nice gentlemen who left Haverhill [New Hampshire, about 120 miles northwest of Boston], on Connecticut River. . . . These gentlemen say the woods in those parts, as far as Ticonderoga [New York, about 70 miles west of Haverhill], had been burning for some time with amazing fury. The fires were raging to such a degree in several townships through which they passed that they were in danger of being suffocated. . . . These gentlemen say, as they came down the country, whenever they were upon a high piece of ground, which gave them a prospect, the woods on all quarters seemed to be on fire. The smoak had been so thick, that for several days the sun had been darkened; it appeared as it does through a piece of smoked glass, and before night it was wholly obscured.”²

The cause of these extensive fires is explained by an eyewitness, Historian William Gordon: “It is the American custom to make large fires in the woods, for the purpose of clearing the lands in the new settlements. This was practised in the spring of the present year [1780] in a much greater degree than usual, through the interruption that had been given to the business for a few years, by the war. In the county of York; in the western parts of New Hampshire and Massachusetts; and in Vermont, uncommonly large fires had been kept up to the extent of many score miles, all around the frontiers. Thus the people in the new towns had been employed for two or three weeks; beside, some large and extensive fires had raged in the woods for several days, before they could be extinguished.”³

* Original spelling and grammar have been preserved in all quotations.

Smoky conditions continued past the nineteenth. The Journal of the House of the Connecticut Legislature, at Hartford (in central Connecticut), for May 19 (as written some time later), records the following statement: “Saturday 3d June P.M. Still dry and hazy, the atmosphere filled with suffocating smoke to the senses of sight and smell, like burning of the woods, gradually rendering the sun at about two hours height as red as crimson or rather like a body of blood . . . and became more and more obscure, descending in the thickening hemisphere to the horizon with its usual appearance through a smoaky glass.”⁴

Smoke condition for three weeks

These records show that the smoky condition existed for at least three weeks. It was in this context of fires and smoke already covering a wide area of New England, that the specific atmospheric conditions and events of May 19 occurred.

Typical of several reports of the events of May 19 is this one from Newport, Rhode Island, published the very next day: “In the morning were showers, attended with distant thunder. About 10 o’clock A.M. a darkness came on, which by 11 was perceived to be very unusual and extraordinary. . . . The darkness became and continued so intense from a little before noon to near 3 o’clock as that persons could not read, and it became necessary to light up candles. . . . A little after two, P.M., it became somewhat lighter; but the darkness soon returned. About 3 o’clock it began to go off, and at four P.M., the heavens resumed their usual light as in a cloudy day, although the cloudiness continued all the rest of the afternoon. . . . There was a small breeze from S.W. during the whole darkness.”⁵

At Boston a similar report was published: “On Friday last about Ten O’clock, there came over this Town a dark Cloud, which continued increasing darker and darker till near One O’clock when it became so dark that the inhabitants were obliged to quit their Business. The Darkness continued ’till near Three O’clock, when it gradually grew lighter and lighter, till the light became as usual.”⁶

At New Haven, Connecticut, the darkness came on sometime during the morning, ending at noon. It was greatest between 11:00 and 12:00.⁷ At Norwich, Connecticut, it began about 10:00 A.M., and ended a little past one in the afternoon.⁸ At Ipswich, in northeastern Massachusetts, the darkness became noticeable about 11:00 A.M. and ended between 3:00 and 4:00 P.M.

Other reports are consistent with these. Corresponding times are usually earlier for western towns than for those in the east. Three to six hours is the typical total time given for the obscuration, including the time during which the light faded and increased again. The most intense darkness lasted little more than one to two hours. Most newspaper reports indicate that it became light again in the afternoon, although it remained cloudy in most places.

From Salem, north of Boston, it was reported that the wind changed to a more northerly direction where a black cloud lay. “The wind brought that body of smoke a[nd] vapor over us in the evening. . . . This gross darkness held ’till about 1 o’clock, [Saturday morning]. . . . Between 1 and 2, the wind freshened up at N.E. and drove the smoke and clouds away.”⁹

Most post-1780 authors state that the darkness lasted some 14 hours, or more than two to three times the duration recorded by several 1780 observers. From the above sources it is clear how this misunderstanding has arisen. It is approximately 14 hours from the earliest beginning of noticeable darkness in the westernmost towns to the end of the second obscuration, near midnight, in some eastern towns. There are no reports of 14 hours of darkness in any one location.

After a detailed analysis of many reports from 1780 and later sources, Leggitt describes the area that experienced darkness sometime during the day or night of May 19, 1780. There were reports that it was not dark to the west and southwest of this area: “From the sea coasts of Connecticut and Rhode Island in the south to above Portsmouth, Maine toward the north. From Albany, New

INSPIRED GEMS

Favorite Bible texts and Spirit of Prophecy quotations selected by local conference presidents of North America.

John W. Fowler
Missouri Conference

- “Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us” (Eph. 3:20).
- “We need the energy of the Holy Spirit to accompany our efforts. Never venture to enter the desk until you have wrestled with God in prayer, and come forth as seeing Him who is invisible, with your faces lighted up with beams from the Sun of Righteousness. You will then have no tame words to offer. The divine truths which glow in your own breast will kindle the hearts of others.”—Review and Herald, July 22, 1884.

York in the west to far out in the ocean eastward . . . two hundred miles east and west, and one hundred and twenty-five miles north and south.”¹⁰

Leggitt also observes that later authors have made and repeated much larger claims concerning the extent of the darkness. None of the exaggerated claims have source documentation to substantiate them. They seem to be at variance with the 1780 record.

A different aspect of the extent of the darkness, as viewed from one location, is found in this report from observers in Ipswich, Massachusetts: “About one o’clock a glin of light which had continued till this time in the East, shut in, and the darkness was greater than it had been any time before. Between one and two o’clock, the wind from the West freshened a little, and a glin appeared in that quarter.”¹¹

This statement indicates a definite width to the cloud that caused the darkness in this location. As it moved across the landscape, it was only wide enough to completely “shut in” that location for less than an hour. Although insufficient information is available to make a precise calculation, the dark, obscuring cloud could not have been more than a few tens of miles wide, given the weather conditions as reported.

Reports from several locations give some idea of how dark it became. It is not clear in all cases whether the observers were indoors or outdoors, thus intensities may not be comparable. It appears that the intensity varied from place to place. In no case is there any suggestion that it was total at any time. Here are three typical statements: “The greatest darkness was at least equal to what is called candle-lighting in the evening.”¹²

“The obscurity was so great that those who had good eyesight, could scarcely see to read common print. . . . It was the judgement of many that at about 12 o’clock (the time of greatest obscurity) the daylight was not greater, if so great, as the bright moonlight.”¹³

From Providence, Rhode Island, came a report that it was “nearly the same Degree and Appearance of light as at about Half an Hour after Sunset,” about two days after new moon.¹⁴

All of these statements must be understood, of course, in terms of the darkness known only in the days prior to the advent of electricity.

Of all aspects of the Dark Day, the cause has been the most debated, particularly by those who attach religious significance to the event. In the 1780 record we find two fundamentally different types of statements: opinions and deliberate observations. An examination of the observations will help us understand the cause.

As noted earlier, May 19 was one day out of many in New England when the atmosphere was charged with smoke from extensive forest fires. Almost all reports of the darkness mention increasing cloudiness and rain, followed by the darkness. From an unspecified location in New Hampshire these details are provided: “I observed a light gleam in the north and northeast, and a very thick vapour to the south-west which at first I took to be a thunder cloud. There was a thick kind of fog which rested on the tops of the hills at the time of the greatest obscuration. A gentleman riding in the woods above Pennicook says that in the lowlands he could scarcely breathe.”¹⁵

Several writers noted a smell in the atmosphere during the darkness. At Ipswich, it smelled like burned leaves. At a nearby tavern the same observer noted, “The strange appearance and the smell of the rain water that they had been saving in tubs. Upon examining the water, I found a scum over it, which rubbing between my thumb and finger, I found to be nothing but the black ashes of burnt leaves. The water gave the same sooty smell which we had observed in the air, and confirmed me in my opinion, that the smell mentioned above was occasioned by the smoke, or very small particles of burnt leaves, which had obscured the hemisphere for several days past, and were brought down by the rain.”¹⁶

“Clouds and smoke”

In another location “there were the remains of a snowdrift which lay before an house and had been so covered with wood chips, that it [had] not dissolved. The day before the darkness, the man had raked off the chips and dirt that the sun might melt it, so that it was as white as in the winter, but by the descent of the vapour on Friday it became all over dark and sooty. These circumstances . . . are undeniable proofs that the darkness must have been the effect of clouds and smoak.”¹⁷

Two scientists reported on the cause of the darkness. Samuel Stearns apparently made no specific observations as others did, and does not refer to the forest fires raging at the time. But after a lengthy discussion of fog, smoke, vegetable matter, dust, and other types of material which can be suspended in the atmosphere he states his opinion of the “genuine secondary cause.” It was “undoubtedly a vast collection of such particles that caused the late common darkness, which particles, after being exhaled, were driven together by certain winds.”¹⁸

The “first cause” Stearns attributes to “Him that walketh upon the wings of the wind . . . He at whose voice the stormy winds are obedient.” He also expressed his opinion that the darkness was, perhaps, a token of God’s indignation against the sins of the people, and an omen of some future destruction if they did not repent. This fear was also expressed by others at the time.

Samuel Williams, professor of mathematics and physics at Harvard University, wrote a summary of many accounts of the Dark Day. He also did some simple experiments during the darkness. After a lengthy report of fires in the woods, smoke, and other particles in the atmosphere, scum on the water, the clouds and rain, and the interference of light by various suspended particles, he says: “As the winds had been small and variable for several days, vapors instead of dispersing must have constantly been rising and collecting in the air until the atmosphere became charged with an uncommon quantity of them.” He concludes: “In this way we can account

Bill's bike

By NETTIE EDEN

"Mother, do we have to pick beans all day every day?" Bill asked a little crossly, wiping his forehead. "It's terribly hot! Can't we go home and rest till it's cooler?"

"I wish we could, Bill," Mother answered sympathetically. "Bean picking is hard work, and the weather is hot. But we must work to make enough to pay our bills. I'm just thankful the cannery has hired us this summer."

After worship that evening Mother promised Bill that he could use half the money he earned, to buy a new bicycle.

Bill whistled as he picked beans the next day. He wasn't sure whether the weather was cooler or he just had a happier feeling inside. But he didn't mind picking beans nearly as much as usual.

One day the bean picking was all done, and Mother asked, "How would you like to shop for school clothes?"

"Hooray!" Bill shouted. "I'll make a list. And let's not forget the bike." Half his earnings amounted to the exact price of the bicycle he had his eye on at Mr. Logan's hardware store.

"But what about my tithe, Mom? If I take out tithe, there won't be enough left for the bike." He looked troubled.

"You know what God's Word teaches us about taking out the tithe first," Mother reminded him gently. "You are a big boy and must make your own decision. You can pay tithe and wait until you have earned some extra money to pay for the bike, or you can buy the bike with money that does not really belong to you."

Bill thought and thought. He had always paid tithe. But how he wanted that bike so he could ride it to school the first day. At last he said softly, "I'll pay my tithe. I can earn extra money doing odd jobs after school to finish paying for the bike."

After Bill and Mother had finished shopping Bill suggested that they stop by the hardware store.

"Mr. Logan," he said, "I don't have quite enough money to pay for this bike, but I'd like to give you what I have and then pay you the rest when I've earned it."

"I'll tell you what, Bill," replied Mr. Logan. "While we were looking at the bike, I noticed that there is a little dent in the fender. It must have been damaged in shipping. We'll take seven dollars off the price because of the dent."

"Great! That means I can take the bike right now."

On the way home Bill said, "Mom, the Lord must have helped me so I could have the bike to ride right away."

"Yes, He did. I believe that when we're faithful in giving Him our tithes and offerings He opens the windows of heaven and pours out His blessings, just as it says in Malachi 3:10. But even if you hadn't been able to get the bike today, I still think it was best to pay your tithe first, Bill, because God has asked us to do so and it's best to obey Him no matter what."

"You know, Mother, I think you're right."

for all the phenomena that were observed."¹⁹ It is evident from his report that Williams believed that the darkness was the result of natural causes.

The 1780 record gives a quite consistent statement of observed facts that led a number of 1780 writers to express their belief in a natural cause for the darkness. Of the 14 original newspaper articles, nine discuss the cause. All nine attribute it to a natural phenomenon involving various combinations of clouds, smoke, vapor, or suspended particles.

The evidence shows that a large amount of smoke and suspended, burned, vegetable debris from forest fires in New Hampshire and Vermont had been collecting in the air for several days. On Friday, the nineteenth, a storm front passed across New England towards the northeast, collecting, mixing, and concentrating this sooty material as it went. Thus thick, black clouds were formed, which obscured the sun to a much greater degree than would have been the case with normal, clean storm clouds. These dark clouds apparently were blown out to sea in the late afternoon, but returned over some of the coastal towns when the wind shifted in the evening.

The moon, which was just past full, became visible near midnight when the clouds dispersed. Lingering smoke in the air preferentially scattered the blue light, and made the moon's first appearance very red, just as it had made both the sun and the moon appear red for several days before.

Some readers may be disturbed to learn that the Dark Day may be accounted for by natural causes. While it would be more satisfying theologically if the event were clearly supernatural, we should remember that there is no such Biblical requirement. Other signs in the natural world are attributable to natural causes.

As we refer to physical phenomena or historic events, it is important that we be informed of the observed facts. In the case of the Dark Day we need to be careful to base our applications on the original historic record of this event rather than on the assumptions and speculations made later on the basis of incomplete evidence. As Ellen White said: "Truth can afford to be fair. No true doctrine will lose anything by close investigation."—Review and Herald, Dec. 20, 1892. □

Concluded

REFERENCES

- ¹ Providence Gazette, May 20, 1780.
- ² Independent Chronicle, June 15, 1780.
- ³ William Gordon, The History of the Rise, Progress and Establishment of the Independence of the United States of America, p. 57.
- ⁴ Charles J. Hoadly, The Public Records of the State of Connecticut, p. 4.
- ⁵ Massachusetts Spy, June 8, 1780.
- ⁶ Boston Gazette, May 22, 1780.
- ⁷ Connecticut Journal, May 25, 1780.
- ⁸ Norwich Packet, May 25, 1780.
- ⁹ Independent Chronicle, May 25, 1780.
- ¹⁰ Deryl Herbert Leggitt, "An Investigation Into the Dark Day of May 19, 1780," Master's degree thesis, SDA Theological Seminary, 1951.
- ¹¹ Independent Chronicle, May 25, 1780.
- ¹² Connecticut Journal, May 25, 1780.
- ¹³ Massachusetts Spy, May 25, 1780.
- ¹⁴ Providence Gazette, May 20, 1780.
- ¹⁵ Independent Ledger, June 5, 1780.
- ¹⁶ Independent Chronicle, May 25, 1780.
- ¹⁷ Providence Gazette, May 20, 1780.
- ¹⁸ Independent Chronicle, June 22, 1780.
- ¹⁹ J. Hugh Pruett, "Dark Days in North America," The Griffith Observer, XI, March, 1947, p. 28.

Job's Prayers—4

Accepting God's will

Honest, effective prayer accepts God and His will on every level of response—the physical, mental, social, and spiritual. These dimensions are so integrated and interrelated that we cannot possibly separate them. What affects us in one sphere has a decided effect in the others.

When we understand that God's laws span every dimension of life we come to realize that, for instance, any violation of health principles God has outlined is just as detrimental to living the kind of life God wills for us as is violation of the Ten Commandments. God desires that we, as His sons and daughters, enjoy the most abundant life He makes possible. However, we so often settle for the minimum rather than for the maximum. We try to live as close as we can to the world rather than as close as possible to heaven. In doing so we hurt ourselves and cheat ourselves out of the better, happier life that God wants us to have.

This leads us back to Job's prayers. How do you suppose the better understanding of God that came to Job as a result of his trials affected his prayer life after his period of severe testing came to an end?

Obviously he had been humbled. After a long and somewhat misinformed discussion on the part of Job and his friends concerning God's dealings, the Creator at last stepped in, not to settle their argument, but to clear up their misunderstandings concerning Himself.

God made no attempt to explain why the wicked seem to prosper while the righteous suffer. Instead He simply revealed His goodness, power, and wisdom as demonstrated in creation.

Halfway through God's revelation He paused to give Job a chance to respond, directing the question to him: "Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty instruct him? he that reproveth God, let him answer it" (chap. 40:2).

Response of humility

Job got the point. In deep humility he responded: "Behold, I am vile; what shall I answer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth" (verse 4). Previously he had been ready to challenge God with his imagined innocence. Now he admitted "I am vile," as must anyone who comes to understand the majesty of God.

After God had proceeded to His revelation of Himself to the patriarch, Job realized how limited his knowledge of God had been. He said to his Creator: "Therefore have I uttered that I understood not; things too wonderful for me, which I knew not" (chap. 42:3).

Next Job indicated that he had moved out from an experience based on false tradition to one based on personal communion and contact with God. He had heard and believed some misinformation about God, but, having come into personal contact with the Creator, he now realized, even though he still did not understand fully why he had to suffer, that the kind of God he loved and served was One whom he could trust completely with all that he had and was—that he could depend fully on Him to always do that which was right and best.

From that time on Job's prayers must have been remarkably different, because they were based on a more realistic confidence and understanding. He seems to have come to the conclusion that he could not blame his friends for reacting unfairly and unkindly when they held the same misconceptions and misunderstandings he held.

Consequently he prayed for them. His prayer is not recorded, but it must have been filled with the confidence and humility that he had learned. We discover that Job's prayer had an immediate effect—not only bringing the repentance, forgiveness, and understanding that he desired on the part of his friends but bringing his own trials to a happy and especially blessed conclusion.

L. R. V.

Concluded

After Mount St. Helens

Compared with the terrible loss of life that resulted from several previous volcanic eruptions, the death toll from the Mount St. Helens blast in Washington State on May 18 was relatively minor—under 100. When Mt. Etna in Sicily blew its top in 1669, 20,000 people died. When Krakatoa in Indonesia exploded in 1883, 35,000 people died—mostly from the tidal wave that resulted. And when Mt. Pelée in the West Indies erupted in 1902, about 30,000 people died and the city of St. Pierre on Martinique was wiped out.

Nevertheless, the Mount St. Helens eruption was the most destructive in the history of the United States. Newsweek (June 2 issue) reported that in just a few hours exploding gases "had thrown up almost as much ash, mud and molten minerals as Mount Vesuvius did when it buried Pompeii and Herculaneum in A.D. 79. The eruption's impact was so staggering that witnesses spoke in terms of Biblical wrath or nuclear Armageddon. Shock waves leveled 44,000 acres of fir trees as if they were matchsticks. Boiling mud traveling 30 miles per hour overflowed local riverbanks, smashed bridges, swallowed homes and killed millions of salmon and trout. Some rivers got so hot that fish actually jumped out."

One authority estimated that the volcano belched 8 trillion pounds of ash 12 miles up into the atmosphere—the equivalent of one ton of ash for each person on earth. This ash disabled more than 6,000 miles of local roads and highways in Washington, choked the filters of automobile engines, closed airports, and sent people rushing for face masks. When the gritty cloud of ash and debris cleared away, the once conical mountain had lost almost half a mile of height.

Mount St. Helens, of course, is not the only volcano in the world. According to some estimates, there are 600 active volcanoes and 10,000 inactive ones along three belts that closely match the earthquake regions. One "ring of fire" runs northward to the Aleutians along the west coast of South and North America, then follows southward down the Asian coast. A second belt extends from the Mediterranean to the East Indies, and a third lies along the midocean ridge connecting the major oceans.

It is not our purpose here to discuss the causes of volcanoes. That is a subject for scientists. We shall, instead, draw attention to several matters that we think have relevance to the spiritual life of Seventh-day Adventists.

Convulsions of nature

One of the signs that will immediately precede the return of Christ will be tremendous convulsions of nature. On the day of Pentecost, the apostle Peter repeated the words of Joel: "I will shew wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke: the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come" (Acts 2:19, 20). And John the revelator, describing the scene during the seventh of the seven last plagues, wrote: "There were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. . . . And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found" (Rev. 16:18-20).

Commenting on these verses, Ellen G. White declared: "More terrible manifestations than the world has ever yet beheld, will be witnessed at the second advent of Christ. . . . As lightnings from heaven unite with the fire in the earth, the mountains will burn like a furnace, and will pour forth terrific streams of lava, overwhelming gardens and fields, villages and cities. Seething molten masses thrown into the rivers will cause the waters to boil, sending forth massive rocks with indescribable violence and scattering their broken fragments upon the land. Rivers will be dried up. The earth will be convulsed; everywhere there will be dreadful earthquakes and eruptions."—Patriarchs and Prophets, pp. 109, 110.

The secular mind will see no special meaning in these catastrophes. Multitudes will attribute them merely to natural causes. And, indeed, they may be explained as "natural" rather than "supernatural." But just as the Dark Day of 1780 was "natural" to some and "supernatural" to others, so it will be in the future. The world at large will be more intent upon explaining volcanoes, earthquakes, and other violent phenomena of nature than in listening to God's voice speaking through these happenings.

Jesus said: "In the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be" (Matt. 24:38, 39). The people could have escaped destruction. They had seen Noah building the ark for 120 years. But instead of heeding his warning, they ridiculed, criticized, and caricatured him. They called him a fanatic, and "talked of science and of the laws controlling nature." "They laughed at him for his peculiar earnestness and intense feeling in regard to the judgments which he declared God would surely fulfill."—The SDA Bible Commentary, Ellen G. White Comments, on Genesis 6:12, 13, p. 1090.

"Nobody listened"

We thought of this as we read accounts of the warnings that were sounded before Mount St. Helens erupted. "We tried to let people know where the hazards were," said Sheriff Bill Closner of Skamania County, "but nobody listened." Even when deputy sheriffs shouted through bullhorns, "Evacuate! Evacuate! Muck is coming!" and everyone was warned by telephone, many paid no attention. Others joked about their situation. "People were making it into an adventure," said one man who took the warning seriously and fled from his home.

Another thing that impressed us was that the eruption was not predicted, and came suddenly. People's magazine of April 21 quoted Donal Mullineaux, a volcanologist in the U.S. Geological Survey, as saying,

INSPIRED GEMS

Favorite Bible texts and Spirit of Prophecy quotations selected by local conference presidents of North America.

Charles Keymer
Michigan Conference

- "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye" (Ps. 32:8).
- "The Lord will teach us our duty just as willingly as He will teach somebody else. If we come to Him in faith, He will speak His mysteries to us personally. Our hearts will often burn within us as One draws nigh to commune with us as He did with Enoch. Those who decide to do nothing in any line that will displease God, will know, after presenting their case before Him, just what course to pursue. And they will receive not only wisdom, but strength. Power for obedience, for service, will be imparted to them, as Christ has promised."—The Desire of Ages, p. 668.

“‘The probability of a big, big eruption is very low.’” The magazine itself said that the probability of there being “clouds of poisonous gas, searing hot winds and cascades of mud and rock” seemed unlikely. Time magazine quoted Robert Christiansen, chief geologist of the U.S. Geological Survey: “‘Mount St. Helens is simply not ready to blow off.’” Added the magazine: “‘Few scientists feared the worst.’” It also spoke of “the embarrassing failure of geologists to predict the actual eruption, despite eight weeks of warning and the presence of observers, tiltmeters, seismographs and aerial photography.”

Perhaps there is a lesson here for Seventh-day Adventists and others who consider themselves well informed concerning last-day events and signs of Christ's return. Jesus said of the servant who had grown tired of waiting for his master's return: “The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of” (Matt. 24:50). And the apostle Paul wrote: “When they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child” (1 Thess. 5:3).

“Midnight at noon”

Inasmuch as the Mount St. Helens eruption came just one day before the 200th anniversary of the Dark Day, inevitably we were impressed by the similarity of the language used to describe one aspect of the two events—the palpable darkness. In a story entitled, “A Stifling Darkness Descended” the Washington Post said that the black, boiling cloud of hot ashes “blocked out the sun. . . . Within 15 seconds the hillside around [Buzz Smith and his two sons] had disappeared into a darkness so thick that Smith's flashlight made a weak shining sphere hardly bright enough to illuminate his hand.” Time reported that the city of Yakima, 85 miles east of the volcano, “experienced midnight at noon.” Newsweek said that the cloud of ash “turned day to night in Yakima.” Is there a message here for those who will listen?

Mount St. Helens may not erupt again soon; or it may. But someday the whole earth will erupt. Do we look toward that day with fear, or do we have the kind of relationship with Jesus that enables us to face the future without fear, trusting the hand that was nailed to the cross for us? The prophet of hope, Isaiah, wrote: “Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee. Trust ye in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength” (chap. 26:3, 4). And David wrote in Psalm 91, a psalm that we would do well to memorize: “He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in him will I trust” (verses 1, 2). How good it will be during the seven last plagues to repeat the promise: “Because thou hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, even the most High, thy habitation; there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling” (verses 9, 10).

“There will be mighty earthquakes and great destruction of human life. But as in the days of the great Deluge Noah was preserved in the ark that God had prepared for him, so in these days of destruction and calamity, God will be the refuge of His believing ones.”—The SDA Bible Commentary, Ellen G. White Comments, on 2 Peter 3:10, p. 946.

“God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof” (Ps. 46:1-3).

K. H. W.

HEALTH CAPSULES

Sponsored by the General Conference Department of Health

Lactase limited?

By ALICE G. MARSH, Sc.D., R.D.
Andrews University

Does using milk cause you distress, abdominal cramps, bloating, excessive gas, or diarrhea? When these symptoms are because of the lack of the intestinal enzyme lactase, it means that lactose, the double sugar of milk, cannot be digested to glucose and galactose—two single sugars. Single sugars are absorbed; double sugars are not. When there is a lactase deficiency, lactose remains in the intestinal tract and becomes food for gas-forming bacteria.

Seldom does an older child or an adult lack lactase completely, but it is not uncommon for some people to ingest lactose beyond their ability to digest it. A cup and a half of milk at one meal may cause distress. A half cup of milk at each meal may be entirely tolerable, yet provide the same amount of calcium, riboflavin, and other nutrients that are nutritionally valuable in one and one-half cups of milk.

Some persons who have symptoms of lactose intolerance have no problem with buttermilk, yogurt, or other cultured milks in which some of the lactose is converted into other nutritional forms. Cottage cheese may be well tolerated, for most of the lactose has been separated from the curd and is in the whey.

For the severely lactase-deficient person, a yeast lactase enzyme has been used successfully with milk. Upon 24 hours of refrigeration after the enzyme is added, 70 to 75 percent of the lactose is converted to glucose and galactose. This natural-tasting sweet milk has been found to be acceptable to lactase-deficient persons when tested in double-blind studies over an extended period of time.^{1, 2} Lactase-treated milk is a little sweeter to the taste, for lactose is less sweet than are its separated single sugars. The sugar content is not increased, however.

Although lactase-treated milk is not now commercially available, the enzyme is available.³

¹ A. H. R. Cheng et al., “Long-term acceptance of low-lactose milk,” American Journal of Clinical Nutrition, vol. 32 (October, 1979), pp. 1989-1993.

² N. S. Rosensweig, “On lactase-hydrolyzed milk,” American Journal of Clinical Nutrition, vol. 32 (October, 1979), p. 1979.

³ “Lact-Aid,” Sugar-Lo Company, 3540 Atlantic Avenue, P.O. Box 1017, Atlantic City, New Jersey 08404.

The Dark Day

The three articles on the Dark Day of 1780 (by Meriton E. Sprengel, Adventist Review, May 22, 29, June 5) interested me, not because they brought out anything more about the event than I had already read in the May, 1780, newspapers and other early accounts in the Library of Congress, but because the author traced the views of the Adventist (Millerite) and Seventh-day Adventist writers who discussed its prophetic significance. (Two minor corrections might be noted: Joshua Spaulding and Amzi Armstrong were not "Adventist" theologians; the term Adventist was coined by, and is the proper designation of, the people nicknamed Millerites and of their successors.)

I was not aware that James White had accepted the accounts of natural causes for the darkness before he changed his mind—presumably, to judge from the REVIEW AND HERALD extracts—from reading the later, abridged accounts such as those of Josiah Litch and D. T. Taylor. The later reports sometimes confused the details, attributing to the day the clear sky and the appearance of the stars, originally reported as following the passing of the clouds in the night; they omitted mention of clouds, rain, and smoke, and of soot or burned leaves floating on rainwater, emphasizing instead a mysterious, supernatural cause.

It is not surprising that many people at the time were unable to explain what had happened. The eyewitnesses were clear on the fact that there were clouds, smoke, and the rest, and it was known that farmers had been burning fires in the woods to clear new land (see descriptions in the Source Book [1962], Nos. 562-575, "Dark Day, 1780"). Yet it seemed to them impossible that the usual spring burnings could produce enough smoke to cause such an unusual darkness. They did not know, as we do now, that smoke from forest fires in the far distant West can travel across the continent. Without the instant communication and extensive weather reports such as we have today, local observers could not know the extent of the smoke and did not realize that the fog coming in from the Atlantic was blocking the eastward flow of the smoke-laden clouds and piling layers of mist, clouds, and smoke thick enough to darken a large part of New England. A synthesis of the varying local descriptions underlies this explanation of the weather conditions in an 1825 report (Source Book, No. 575), corroborated by the meteorologist consulted by Leggitt, whose Master's thesis is cited by Springel.

Seventh-day Adventist writers have long had access to the contemporary reports of this Dark Day. Many of the accounts were included in the 1919 and 1922 editions of the Source Book, and more of them were included in the 1962 edition. In Ellen G. White's discussion of the Dark Day as a sign of the last days, she inserted (The Great Controversy, pp. 306, 307) quotations from historical sources that mention clouds, rain, a "black cloud," and heavy mist. Apparently she was not disturbed by the presence of these natural causes. Seventh-day Adventists have accepted the 1833 falling of the stars as Leonid meteors; and no one claims that the Lisbon earthquake had any characteristics that are not present in other earthquakes; or that other signs mentioned in the same discourse of Jesus—such as "the sea and the waves roaring" or "men's hearts failing them for fear" for the future—must be produced without natural causes. In both the 1922 and 1962 editions of the Source Book, editorial notes explain that natural causes do not invalidate an event as a divinely ordained sign, since the Scripture tells us that God has at other times used natural means—such as a wind to part the Red Sea for the Israelites—in intervening for His special purposes (1922 ed., p. 134; 1962 ed., No. 571).

Much earlier, Seventh-day Adventist writers had pointed out that natural causes or repetitions of these signs in nature are not incompatible with their being last-day signs. In the first edition of Uriah Smith's Thoughts on the Book of Revelation appears his 1865 statement (pp. 111, 113-115) mentioning other dark days and the cyclic return of the Leonid meteors, emphasizing their timing and their effect on the people. He expands this in the 1885 printing (pp. 145, 146); and in a Review editorial of July 5, 1877, page 16, he says that repetitions within the predicted time may be God's method of reaching different localities with the same sign.

In 1882 A. Smith (no relation to Uriah Smith) writes of the Dark Day of 1780 as not unique, but preeminent, and describes the clouds, vapor, and sooty scum; he adds that "the fact that the phenomenon was a local one also locates the causes," but says that "this fact does not invalidate the phenomenon as a fulfillment of prophecy" (Review and Herald, June 20, 1882, p. 388). J. N. Loughborough, writing in 1883, answers the inquiry, "If these were signs of Christ's coming, why have they not been given in other parts of the world?" He replies: "Our Saviour said, 'There shall be signs in the sun'" and mentions an eruption of Mount Hecla, a few years after 1780, that caused considerable obscuration of the sun in Europe, and one very dark day in Amsterdam that sent frightened people into the churches (Review and Herald, Dec. 1883, p. 756).

In 1913 D. E. Robinson answered the same question—Why only in the United States?—by citing the recurrence of the Leonid meteor showers and different dark days in various parts of the world, including one in France during which the country people concluded that the last day had arrived. He observes: "So long as these dark days occurred at the time specified by the prophecy, need we contend that they were supernatural?" (Review and Herald, July 24, 1913, pp. 701, 702).

The Old Testament prediction of the darkening of the sun and moon puts it among last-day "wonders" (mentioned, incidentally, immediately after the phrase "pillars of smoke"), before the great day of the Lord (Joel 2:30, 31). In the New Testament it is to come "after the tribulation of those days" (Matt. 24:29), "in those days, after that tribulation" (Mark 13:24), and following "the great earthquake" under the sixth seal (Rev. 6:12).

Some have clung to the idea that to be a sign from God this must be a supernatural event, against or completely unaccounted for by the laws of nature. The forest fires were known at the time, but because of lack of information were deemed an insufficient cause. Aside from several fantastic explanations put forward, the alternative view was the supernatural cause. The latter turned the attention of many in New England to the prophecies of the last days, and doubtless to some extent prepared their minds for the message of the Miller movement to come.

But to continue to say that the darkness cannot be accounted for and that the cause is unknown is no longer valid—especially since 1950, when smoke from forest fires in British Columbia and Alberta was known to have caused an unusual darkness across the northern part of the United States (Source Book [Commentary Reference Series, vol. 9, 1962], Nos. 576-578). The difference was that the 1950 smoke swept on across the Atlantic instead of piling up in an area as small as New England. The Dark Day of 1780 was scheduled for a specific period, 200 years ago, and it accomplished its purpose.

JULIA NEUFFER
Tampa, Florida

As this issue goes to press the REVIEW staff is moving into new offices on the north corner of the third floor of the Review and Herald building. Under construction for about ten months, the new addition will house not only the REVIEW offices but also the Message and Guide editorial staffs, and an addition to the library.

The author of "The Land of Hungry Eyes" (p. 9) became a Seventh-day Adventist while serving a sentence in a State penitentiary. In the letter accompanying his article, written from prison, he said, "I receive the REVIEW free through our union conference. I was glancing through a copy today and was struck by the happiness and peacefulness of the Adventists pictured. Comparing their faces with those about me, I noticed the eyes of my fellow inmates. 'The Land of Hungry Eyes' is the result of my thinking about this incredible difference."

Now on parole, the author is studying to enter a medical-related profession and in that capacity plans to serve his church and others.

Although she has been writing for more than 12 years, Susan Hanely Morrissey had never had any of her work accepted for publication prior to "The Barn" (p. 15). Mrs. Morrissey, mother of three children, is presently attending college, majoring in English and minor-ing in art.

Mrs. Morrissey wrote "The Barn" to go with the picture that accompanies the poem. The actual barn is situated near the New Jersey camp meeting site. Richard W. Koestler, the artist, is an engraver and artist. He enters art shows and has won a number of awards. All the proceeds from his prizes go to Sabbath school Investment.

Art and photo credits: Cover, p. 6, Skip Baker; p. 5, Harry Baerg; p. 8, H. Armstrong Roberts; p. 12, Rudi Henning; p. 15, Richard W. Koestler; p. 17, J. Byron Logan; all other photos, courtesy of the respective authors.

LETTERS

Letters submitted for publication should contribute ideas and comments on articles or material printed in the ADVENTIST REVIEW. They should be brief, not exceeding 250 words, and must carry the writer's name, address, and telephone number (although this number will not be printed). Letters must be legible, preferably typewritten, and double-spaced. All will be edited to meet space and literary requirements, but the author's meaning will not be changed. Views expressed in the letters do not necessarily represent those of the editors or of the denomination.

Large-print edition

I am a nearly blind Seventh-day Adventist who has enjoyed the REVIEW for 75 years. I never want to part with it. I was so glad to receive the first large-print edition of the REVIEW.

ALBERTA KESINGER
Ogden, Utah

A student writes

On a recent Sabbath afternoon in the dorm, I happened to find the May 29 issue of the ADVENTIST REVIEW on my roommate's desk. As soon as I saw the title of the Response From Readers, "A Non-Adventist Viewpoint on Ellen G. White," I became interested and started reading.

Lately, I have heard too many criticisms of her writings. So it was nice to spend some time reading such a positive article. I hope that you will provide much more information of this kind and maybe someday publish a book about non-Adventists' views of Ellen White.

TAKAYUKI YODA
Angwin, California

Non-Adventist writes

Re "Above the Measure of My Sin" (June 12).

Since justification is forgiveness of past sins only, and righteousness by faith is a total righteousness, making us like Christ, perhaps our prayer should not be that of the publican, "God be merciful to me a sinner," but that of the Pharisee, "God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men." I am not a Seventh-day Adventist.
2 (906)

PAT DARNELL
Bryant, Arkansas

The "bees"

I had very little idea of what went into the making of a copy of the REVIEW until I read "The Night in Washington" (Bulletin No. 10, May 8-15). Surely your office swarms with activity as the "bees"—be accurate, be timely, be concise, be kind, be tactful, be varied, be interesting, et cetera—making the sweet message of our wonderful paper that comes to our home each week.

EUNICE F. PHELPS
Sacramento, California

Early Writings

I teach a small Sabbath school class. Nearly all the members are mature people with a lifelong Adventist background. I seldom have visitors in my class.

During the last several months I have been stressing the need to reread (or perhaps read for the first time) Early Writings. A wonderful thing has been happening as a result of this study. One by one the members of our class have been doing just that and each has shown evidence of coming under the conviction of the Holy Spirit. Previously some of these people have been indifferent to the writings of Ellen White.

I believe all members of our church would greatly benefit from such study.

NAME WITHHELD

The Dark Day

The recent articles in the REVIEW on the Dark Day (May 22, 29; June 5) present this event as a rather mild affair compared to what Ellen G. White wrote about it in The Great Controversy. "Since the time of Moses no period of darkness of equal density, extent, and duration has ever been recorded."—Page 308. "Christ had pointed out some of the most important events in the history of the world and of the church from His first to His second advent; namely, the destruction of Jerusalem, the great tribulation of the church under the pagan and papal persecutions, the darkening of the sun and moon, and the falling of the stars."—Page 393.

I looked up the old records in many an old New England library. I did not find many references to smoke, but I did learn that the day made a very decided impact on the minds of the people of the time. For example: The town of Antrim, New Hampshire, held a memorial service on the first anniversary of the Dark Day.

It has been quite a common custom for the editors of many New England papers to scoff at the idea that the Dark Day of May 19, 1780, was a sign of the end of the world. They nearly always attributed the darkness to forest fires. These articles used to

Continued on page 21

130th Year of Continuous Publication

EDITOR

Kenneth H. Wood

ASSOCIATE EDITOR

Leo R. Van Dolson

ASSISTANT EDITORS

Jocelyn R. Fay, Aileen Andres Sox

ASSISTANT TO THE EDITOR

Eugene F. Durand

ADMINISTRATIVE SECRETARY

Corinne Russ

EDITORIAL SECRETARIES

Chitra Barnabas, Celia Singer

ART

Director, Byron Steele
Designer, G. W. Busch

CONSULTING EDITORS

Neal C. Wilson, Charles E. Bradford, L. L. Bock, L. L. Butler, Alf Lohne, Enoch Oliveira, G. Ralph Thompson, Max Torkelsen, Francis W. Wernick

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

R. R. Figuhr, Robert H. Pierson, George W. Brown, G. J. Christo, W. T. Clark, Bekele Heye, R. J. Kloosterhuis, Edwin Ludescher, Kenneth J. Mittleider, K. S. Parmenter, W. R. L. Scragg, Joao Wolff

EDITORS, NORTH AMERICAN

UNION EDITIONS

Columbia, Ernest N. Wendth
Southwestern, Richard W. Bendall

EDITORS, INTER-AMERICAN

EDITIONS

English, Wanda Sample; Spanish, Humberto M. Rasi, Raul Villanueva; French, Simone Doleyes

EDITORS, SOUTH AMERICAN

EDITIONS

Portuguese, R. S. Lessa; Spanish, Jose Tabuena

EDITORS, AFRO-MIDEAST EDITION

—, Jean Thomas

CORRESPONDENTS,

WORLD DIVISIONS

Afro-Mideast, —; Australasian, Gordon A. Lee; Euro-Africa, Pietro Copiz; Far Eastern, M. G. Townsend; Inter-American, Fred Hernandez; Northern Europe-West Africa, —; South American, Arthur S. Valle; Southern Asia, A. M. Peterson; Trans-Africa, P. J. Salthany

CORRESPONDENTS,

NORTH AMERICA

UNIONS: Atlantic, Geraldine I. Grout; Canadian, A. N. How; Central, Clara Anderson; Columbia, Ernest N. Wendth; Lake, Jere Wallack; North Pacific, Morten Juberg; Northern, Halle Crowson; Pacific, Shirley Burton; Southern, Oscar Heinrich; Southwestern, Richard W. Bendall

UNIVERSITIES: Andrews, Kevin McClanahan; Loma Linda, Richard Weismeyer

CIRCULATION

Manager, Robert S. Smith
Associate Managers, Gary Grimes, E. W. Moore, Derek Mustow
Field Representative, Ron D. Spear

A large-print edition of the Monthly Digest is available for $14.95 a year; also a quarterly edition in Braille.

TO CONTRIBUTORS

Unsolicited manuscripts are welcome, but notification as to acceptance or rejection may be expected only if accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

An index is published in the last Review of June and December. The Adventist Review is indexed in the Seventh-day Adventist Periodical Index.

The Adventist Review (ISSN 0161-1119) is published every Thursday. Copyright © 1980 Review and Herald Publishing Association, 6856 Eastern Avenue NW., Takoma Park, Washington, D.C. 20012, U.S.A. Second-class postage paid at Washington, D.C. Subscriptions: one year, US$21.95. Single copy, 65 cents.

Vol. 157, No. 34.

words with which Ellen White presented some of her thoughts, rather than about the thoughts themselves. We limited our discussion to examples from one compilation of her writings, the current Morning Watch book, This Day With God.

One of our staff members has been making a mark in the margin of her Morning Watch book every time she comes across an especially appealing figure of speech. It was some of these check-marked sentences that we discussed, after briefly reviewing some of the common forms of figurative language.

We noted that besides using imagery to give their readers imaginative pleasure and to appeal to their senses, authors often use it to make abstract ideas concrete. And in the same way that Jesus spoke in parables to fix ideas in His listeners' memory, authors use word pictures to help readers remember.

In the selection on page 9, Ellen White could simply have written, "Faith is not feeling" and made her point. But she enriched it by writing, "Faith is not a happy flight of feeling, it is simply taking God at His word and believing." We could feel with Mrs. White the condition she describes on page 156: "My head is weary this morning. Mist and clouds hang over my mind; but the suggestions of the enemy to distrust the Lord shall not be cherished."

Simile and metaphor

In her writing, Mrs. White often used simile, expressing a comparison by using some word or phrase such as "like," "as," "than," "similar to," or "resembles." On page 50 we find, "As the wax takes the counterpart of the seal, so the soul receives and retains the moral image of God." Another use of simile that appealed to us was this, on page 139: "There is no use in telling you that you must not wear this or that, for if the love of these vain things is in your heart, your laying off your adornments will only be like cutting the foliage off a tree. . . . What we want is to have the ax laid at the root of the tree. We want to be dead to the world, dead to self, and alive unto God."

Closely related to simile is metaphor, where a comparison between two unlike things is made, but not stated: "Brethren, we must sink the shaft deep in the mine of truth" (p. 93); "I prescribe for you the love of Christ to be taken in large doses and it will work a great change for it has wonderful healing properties" (p. 121); "A whole firmament of chosen ones has He in reserve, that will yet shine forth amidst the darkness" (p. 67).

We liked the personification we found in this sentence on page 65: "We need to strengthen our souls with hope, the twin sister of faith." And in a sentence on page 14, "From the manger to the cross Satan followed the Son of God," we saw symbolism—the manger symbolic of Jesus' birth and the cross of His death.

These are just a few examples, only a limited sampling of the imaginative, colorful, and inspiring language we find through all of Ellen White's writings. In each case the figurative language added something special to the idea of the sentence, making it stronger, richer, more appealing.

Throughout her lifetime Mrs. White was an earnest student of the Bible, a book unexcelled in its use of figurative language. In Education, page 124, she wrote, "As a means of intellectual training, the Bible is more effective than any other book, or all other books combined. The greatness of its themes, the dignified simplicity of its utterances, the beauty of its imagery, quicken and uplift the thoughts as nothing else can."

It is apparent that Mrs. White's own thoughts were uplifted by Bible study and by diligently developing the gifts God gave her. Although her formal education ended at age 9, through her years of prolific writing she made the most of her gift of using words effectively. Our Wednesday morning look at her writing made us appreciate this gift all the more.

J. R. F.

LETTERS Continued from page 2

come out on the anniversary of the event.

Personally I believe on the basis of my own research that forest fires could not have caused the phenomena associated with that day. I do not deny that some fires had been witnessed, but that they caused all the darkness I read about, I cannot believe.

It is very hard for me to believe that Ellen White and her associates, like S. N. Haskell, and others whom I have heard preach, were mistaken in thinking the event was supernatural in its cause.

DAVID I. SHAW
West Paris, Maine

The articles on the Dark Day of 1780 have recalled to my mind a notable address by Former President John F. Kennedy on the night of September 20, 1960, to which I listened in my hotel room in the city of New York. The following morning, before leaving for London, I clipped the full report from the New York Times, and I quote from the President's closing words:

"In 1780 in Hartford, Connecticut, the skies at noon turned one day from blue to gray, and by mid-afternoon the city had darkened over so densely that in that religious age men fell on their knees and begged a final blessing before the end came. The Connecticut House of Representatives was in session, and many of the members clamoured for an immediate adjournment, and the Speaker of the House, one Colonel Davenport, came to his feet, and he silenced the din with these words: "The day of judgment is either approaching or it is not. If it is not, there is no cause for adjournment. If it is, I choose to be found doing my duty. I wish therefore that candles may be brought." I hope that all of us in a difficult and somber time in our country's history may also bring candles to help illuminate our country's way. Thank you."

However varied the many explanations of the 1780 Dark Day, it is interesting to reflect on its being selected for an illustration by a President of the United States at a critical time in his own career and in the affairs of his country.

A. FLOYD TARR
Laguna Beach, California

Is it not interesting that almost exactly 200 years after the Dark Day—lacking one day—the Northwest United States also experienced a "dark day"?

We live in the extreme northern part of Idaho. About seven hours after Mount St. Helens erupted, 300 miles away, we watched as a dense black cloud came from the west and covered the sun, obscuring it from view. It then fell on us as volcanic ash. Almost automatically our minds went back to our Saviour's prophecy about the darkening of the sun and its eventual fulfillment in 1780. It was several days before we saw the sun again.

Surely we must regard these natural calamities as warnings that the end is near.

LLOYD ROSENVOLD
Hope, Idaho

God keeps His promises

By LAWRENCE MAXWELL

Sabbath, November 2

Two promises

The children were crying. They tried to crowd into the room where their father lay moaning on the bed. His back was covered with blood and ugly bruises.

"Mother, why does Daddy's back look like that?" they asked.

Mother didn't answer but hurried them out of the room. "I'll tell you later," she said.

"It's the slave drivers," the oldest sister told the younger children as soon as they were out of the bedroom. "They whipped Daddy today."

Our story for this Week of Prayer begins—as I am sure many of you have guessed—in Egypt back in the bad days when the children of Israel were slaves of a cruel Pharaoh. They had to make bricks for the magnificent new buildings Pharaoh wanted. All day long, while they worked, slave drivers walked around with long whips in their hands. If they thought an Israelite wasn't working fast enough—even if he was sick or tired—they would lash out at him.

Today Daddy had been one of the unlucky ones. Friends had carried him home.

Ben, the oldest brother, was especially concerned. He was nearly 12. He knew that soon he would have to start making bricks. Would the slave drivers treat him as they had treated Father? He shuddered.

When Mother finally came out of the bedroom, the children were full of questions. Ben asked, "Will we Israelites always be slaves? Will I be beaten too?"

"What about me?" said Dan. "I'm 7. Will I be a slave when I'm older?"

Big sister said, "Mother, I thought you and Dad told us once that God promised to give us another country to live in where none of us would be slaves."

Mother's face brightened. "It's true," she said. "God did promise to lead us out of Egypt to the Promised Land, and He will."

"Tell us about it," said Dan.

"Well," Mother began, "you've heard me talk about Abraham. He is the father of all the Israelites. God promised to give his children a special country to live in, with mountains to climb and lakes to swim in and large fields to play on and flowers growing everywhere."

"How much longer will that be?" asked Ben.

Mother said, "I don't know. God told Abraham that his children would be slaves in a foreign country and would live there for four generations." *

"How does that work out?" Ben asked.

"Like this," said Mother.

"Your great-grandfather and his 11 brothers came to Egypt many years ago. They were the first generation. Your grandparents and all their brothers and sisters and cousins were the second generation, your parents and all our cousins are the third generation, and your children are the fourth generation. That means God will lead us out of Egypt to the Promised Land during your lifetime. It won't be long now!"

Just then Father called, and Mother rushed to help him.

Ben walked outside. Maybe he wouldn't have to be a slave! "Please, God," he prayed, "make us free soon. Please don't let me have to be a slave." But Abraham's children would have to wait 430 years before they could actually go and live in that country.

Sad to say, Ben became a slave, and the slave drivers were just as hard on him as they were on everyone else.

And soon the situation for the Israelites became much worse.

You see, during all the terrible years when the Israelites were slaves they had many children. The Bible says, "They multiplied and grew exceedingly strong; so that the land was filled with them" (Ex. 1:7, R.S.V.). Pharaoh didn't like it. He ordered the Egyptians to throw all Israelite baby boys into the Nile River.

It was a cruel law. Many grown-ups blamed God. Ben heard them say, "God has forgotten His promise. We will never go to the Promised Land." These grown-ups had forgotten that when things look their worst God always steps in to help.

God knew the Israelites would need a leader to guide them across the desert. The only school that taught young men how to lead large groups of people across deserts was the Egyptian military academy, where students were trained to be officers in the Egyptian army. If a young Israelite told the principal of that military school, "I want you to train me to lead the Israelites out of Egypt," the principal would refuse. But an Israelite boy must get into that school somehow. As we shall see, God got one there!

He used a girl to help Him. And He used that law about drowning babies.

A little boy was born into the home of the slave Amram and his wife Jochebed. Two children lived in the home already, Aaron, age 3, and Miriam, age 12. Mother Jochebed couldn't bear to throw her new baby into the river.

God gave her an idea. She told Miriam and Aaron that they would throw the baby into the river, just as the law required, except that they would put him in a basket first so he would float. She asked Miriam to run out and get reeds to make the basket and some black pitch to paint on it to keep the water out. "And be careful," Mother whispered. "Don't let anyone find out about our secret!"

Miriam did what Mother asked, and when the basket was finished she helped Mother put soft blankets in it. They laid baby brother on them and closed the lid. Then they knelt and asked God to care for the precious little boy.

At the river they placed the basket carefully among some reeds. Mother went home. Miriam stayed behind to watch, feeling scary and excited inside.

To her surprise, Pharaoh's daughter came with her maid-servants to bathe. The princess saw the basket and sent one of the maids to get it. When she lifted the lid there was the baby, crying!

Oh, but Miriam was worried! Would the princess throw him into the water?

Lawrence Maxwell is associate book editor at Pacific Press Publishing Association, Nampa, Idaho.

She didn't! Miriam heard her say, "This is one of the Israelite children. Isn't he darling! I shall adopt him. He's so sweet. I just wish I had someone to care for him while he is so young."

When Miriam heard that, she squashed her fears and ran out of her hiding place. "Excuse me," she said politely, "but I know someone who could take care of the baby for you. Shall I call her?"

"Yes, please," said the princess.

All the way home Miriam wished she had wings! Wait till Mother heard this! Then she and Mother ran back. It isn't wise to keep a princess waiting.

The princess told Mother, "Take this child to your home and care for him. I will pay you for your work. Later I want him to live with me in the palace. And I want you to call him Moses, because he was taken out of the river."

All the way home Mother and Miriam sang and chuckled and laughed. God had worked everything out so well.

And when Ben and the other Israelites heard what had happened they were just as excited. Imagine having an Israelite in the palace, talking to Pharaoh, persuading him to let the Israelites go! Surely they would leave Egypt soon!

* For an interpretation of the 430 years and four generations, see The SDA Bible Commentary, vol. 1, pp. 313-315, and Patriarchs and Prophets, pp. 759, 760. Ben and Dan are not named in the Bible. They are used here to say what many Israelites were saying in those days.

Sunday, November 3

Good decision, bad mistake

Baby Moses was too young to understand all the excitement he stirred up. He didn't know why so many Israelites longed for a leader to take them from Egypt.

Moses' mother—just like yours—was concerned about his future. She knew it was nearly time for the leader to come. Was Moses God's choice? Was that why the princess had rescued him? Whatever God wanted, Moses must grow up loving Him and willing to obey Him. If someday God asked him to lead Israel and he refused, the Israelites might never get out of Egypt.

I am sure she talked it over with Miriam, because older sisters have so much influence on their brothers. She asked Miriam always to set a good example, because the little boy would copy everything she did.

Miriam was excited when Mother said that. Wouldn't it be wonderful if her brother grew up to be the great leader everyone was looking for! She decided that with God's help she would be the best sister she could possibly be.

During the next several years Mother and Miriam taught Moses about God, how He had created the world, how Adam and Eve had sinned, and how God had promised to send His Son to die so they could be forgiven. And they told him about the promise God made to Abraham to lead the Israelites out of Egypt in the fourth generation.

When Mother told him that some day God might ask him to be the leader, Moses became very thoughtful. He promised her that if God should ever ask him, he would do his best to be exactly the kind of leader God wanted.

That made Mother happy! Then she warned him that in the palace many people would tempt him to do wrong—and forget about God. "They will laugh at you if you refuse, but they'll promise to make you king of Egypt if you obey them. I won't be there to make your decisions for you," she reminded him. "You must choose what you will do. God's angels will be near to help you."

When Moses was about 12 years old, the message they had been expecting came. The princess wanted him at the palace right away.

Moses must have felt very lonely in the palace at first. But there were so many interesting things to see and do that he soon got over that. Because he was the princess' son, he could have almost anything he asked for. The finest teachers in the country were brought to the palace to teach him. He learned math and history and geography and became familiar with "all the wisdom of the Egyptians" (Acts 7:22, R.S.V.). Soon he was enrolled in the Egyptian military academy. That's right! I told you God would get a young Israelite in there!

Moses was everybody's favorite. More and more he heard people saying they hoped he would be the next Pharaoh. There was just one thing he needed to do, the Egyptian officers told him. He must worship the Egyptian gods. Then he would surely be Egypt's next king.

Those officers didn't understand that in the midst of all the action and excitement of the palace, Moses never forgot the promise he made to his mother before he was 12, that if God wanted him to lead Israel, he would be the best leader he could possibly be. He determined to be true to that promise.

By now Moses was nearly 40 years old. An angel told him that God had chosen him. At the same time, angels went to the leaders of the suffering slaves and told them that Moses would rescue them. What excitement there was then! Can't you hear Ben and Dan and the other Israelites talking about the day of deliverance and trying to guess just how soon it would be!

In the palace, Moses told God that he would rather belong to Him, leading the Israelite slaves, than enjoy all the riches and pleasures of being a Pharaoh. It was a beautiful decision, and Jesus and the angels rejoiced.

But right after that, Moses made a mistake that almost spoiled everything.

Moses was such a favorite everywhere he went that he was sure that as soon as he showed the Israelites he was ready to lead them, they would rise up and follow.

One day he got into his favorite chariot and drove out to where the Israelites were working. Along a lonely road he saw an Egyptian slave driver beating an Israelite. He leaped from the chariot and killed the Egyptian with one blow, then buried his dead body in the sand. The Israelite slave thanked him profusely, and Moses went back to the palace very pleased with himself. The rebellion had begun! Look out, slave drivers! The slave he had helped would be sure to tell others, and in a day or two all the slaves would rise, proclaim him their leader, and march out of Egypt with him at their head.

Next day, Moses saw two Israelites quarreling and said to the man who was wrong, "Why do you strike your fellow Israelite?" To his surprise, the man turned on him angrily and demanded, "Who made you a prince and a judge over us? Do you mean to kill me as you killed the Egyptian?" (Ex. 2:14, R.S.V.).

Moses was scared! The Israelites did not appreciate what he had done; and when the Egyptians found out, they would surely kill him. He hurried back to the palace, only to discover that Pharaoh had issued an order for his arrest.

Just how Moses escaped, I do not know. But that night he did not sleep in the palace dreaming of the day he would deliver Israel. That night he was running as fast as possible across the desert, looking back over his shoulder every few minutes to see if the king's soldiers were pursuing him. As he ran, he wept. Why had he been so foolish? Why had he thought he could deliver the Israelites? He was no better than anyone else!

Day and night he ran, till he came to the land of Midian, where the first thing he did was to help seven sisters water their sheep. It was a kind thing to do and made him feel good for the first time in a long while.

After some time had passed, he married one of the sisters, and her father gave him a job herding sheep. What a different life this was! It did no good to shout at the sheep the way he had shouted orders at Egyptian soldiers. It did no good to beat them when they disobeyed, because they would just lie down quietly until he was finished. Sometimes they would quietly die. He had to be patient always. It was a lesson he needed to learn.

Forty years went by. Moses had always been good at math and history. He remembered how God had promised Abraham his children would be freed from bondage after a long time. One day as he was figuring, he perhaps realized that 215 years had passed between the time God made the promise and Jacob and his sons entered Egypt. As he calculated how long ago that had been, he knew the time was near when God would fulfill His promise to Abraham. He wondered who the Israelites' new leader would be.

Monday, November 4

God picks His leader

One day Moses led the sheep to the scattered grass on the western side of the mountain. He felt very sad about the suffering slaves in Egypt and wondered who God would send to lead them to freedom. Years ago he had thought he would be the leader, but that was before he killed the Egyptian slave driver. Now he was sure God would never want him.

While he watched the sheep look for food, he noticed that a bush on the hillside was burning and walked over to take a closer look.

Before he reached it, he heard Someone call his name. "Moses, Moses."

He looked around but could see no one. He had thought he was alone, yet all the time Someone he could not see was nearby, Someone who knew his name, Someone who had been close to him through all the years since he left his mother's home. And now that Someone said to him, "Do not come near; put off your shoes from your feet, for the place on which you are standing is holy ground" (Ex. 3:5, R.S.V.). Moses realized Who was talking and "hid his face, for he was afraid to look at God" (verse 6, R.S.V.).

Obediently, he removed his shoes. Then, to his astonishment, God said, "Come, I will send you to Pharaoh that you may bring forth my people, the sons of Israel, out of Egypt" (verse 10, R.S.V.). God still wanted him to be His leader!

"Oh, no!" Moses gasped. "Not me. I can't do it."

That's one reason God wanted him. Years before, when he killed the slave driver, Moses thought he could deliver Israel by himself. God couldn't use him then. Now that he knew he couldn't do anything without God's help, God could use him in a big way.

Moses began to make excuses. He said the Israelites wouldn't believe God had sent him. He said they wouldn't pay any attention to him. Besides that, he told God, he couldn't speak the Egyptian language any more.

God answered his objections patiently and gave him several signs to impress the Israelites.

"Throw your stick on the ground," God said. Moses did so, and it became a poisonous snake. Moses was so scared, he ran from it. God told him to pick it up by the tail. He did, and it became a stick again. Then God told him to put his hand inside his coat and bring it out again. When Moses obeyed, his hand was white with the terrible disease of leprosy. God told him to put his hand back inside his coat, and the next time he brought it out, it was well. "Show the elders of Israel these signs," God said, "and they will believe that I sent you. And if any of them still don't believe, then take a pitcherful of water out of the river Nile and pour it on the ground. It will turn to blood—and then they will all believe."

Even after all that, Moses still said, "God, send someone else." But God told him He had spoken to Aaron, his brother, and he would do all the talking for him. In fact, God said, Aaron was already on his way from Egypt to meet him.

It seemed like the hardest thing Moses had ever been asked to do. But he remembered the promise he had made to his mother when he was still a boy, that if God should ask him, he would do his best to be the kind of leader God wanted. Now he said he would go and started the long journey back to Egypt, wondering whether his brother really would meet him. How would they find each other in that huge wilderness? Miraculously, they did! And what a happy time they had walking the road to Egypt together, talking about when they were boys!

Reaching Egypt, they called the elders together. Aaron told them that God had spoken to his brother from a burning bush and that Moses had come to lead them out of slavery to the Promised Land. At first, many didn't believe, so Moses showed them the signs God had given, and then they all believed and rejoiced. The Bible says, Think of it! After many years of suffering, the Israelites were going to be free!

"They bowed their heads and worshipped" (chap. 4:31).

"There is one very important thing you must do before God can lead us to the Promised land," Aaron told the elders. "You must begin to keep the Sabbath again, as Adam and Eve kept it in the Garden of Eden, and as our fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob kept it when they sojourned in the land God has promised to give us."

During the years they were slaves, many Israelites had not kept the Sabbath holy. Now Moses and Aaron told them that they must spend this day every week getting acquainted with God, otherwise God would not lead them from Egypt.

The Israelites were so happy to hear that God knew about their suffering and was about to lead them to freedom that they willingly promised to keep the Sabbath. Think of it! After all these many years of waiting and suffering, they were going to be free—in maybe just two or three days! Maybe even by tomorrow night! Moses and Aaron would go to speak to Pharaoh tomorrow morning, and by tomorrow night they would be on their way to the Promised Land.

It was almost too good to be true. The news went through the Israelite homes almost as fast as if there had been radios and television. Everyone was excited, especially the boys and girls. But not Ben. He was an old man now, 92 years old. When he heard the news he curled his lips. "Ha!" he laughed. "Don't you remember," he said to Dan, "when I was 12 and you were 7, Mom said we'd leave Egypt soon? We didn't go. Then Moses was saved by the princess, and everyone said he'd lead us out of Egypt soon, but he didn't. Now he's back to try again, and it won't be any different this time. We won't be leaving for a long, long time."

"But," said Dan, "don't forget God's promise to Abraham! Some of the elders say it is going to be fulfilled now!"

"That, too!" snarled Ben. "We've heard it all before, and it doesn't mean a thing."

"I don't agree," said Dan. "This time we will get out. You'll see I'm right by tomorrow night."

But by tomorrow night all the Israelites had heard the bad news.

Moses and Aaron went to Pharaoh in the morning and told him that the Lord, the God of the Israelites, required them to go into the wilderness for three days to worship Him, and Pharaoh had replied, "Who is the Lord, that I should heed his voice and let Israel go? I do not know the Lord, and moreover I will not let Israel go" (chap. 5:2, R.S.V.). As if that wasn't bad enough, Pharaoh also said, "If the Israelites have time to rest on Sabbath, that's proof that they aren't working hard enough. From now on the Egyptians will not give them straw for their bricks. They must gather their own and still make as many bricks as before."

So Ben was right! The Israelites didn't leave Egypt that night. Instead, their slavery was the worst it had ever been, and it looked as if they would never go to the Promised Land.

Promises kept—exactly!

After being so excited about getting out of Egypt, the Israelites were really discouraged. And as the days passed, things got even worse.

The Egyptians stopped giving them straw. They had to gather their own, yet the taskmasters insisted they make as many bricks as before. When they didn't, they were beaten until they bled, then ordered back to work.

Moses became discouraged. He cried out to God, "Is this why you sent me? Ever since I went to Pharaoh to speak in your name, he has brought trouble upon this people, and you have not rescued your people at all" (Ex. 5:22, 23, N.I.V.).

If Moses was discouraged and the Israelites were discouraged, God was not at all discouraged. "Now you will see what I will do to Pharaoh," He told Moses. "He will let them go; because of my mighty hand he will drive them out of his country" (chap. 6:1, N.I.V.).

When God asks us to do something for Him, He never leaves us to do it on our own. He was about to help Moses in ways Moses had never imagined.

He told Moses and Aaron to go to the river Nile in the morning when Pharaoh came to bathe. Aaron was to tell Pharaoh that because he had not let Israel go when God asked him to, the river would turn to blood. "Then you will know you must respect and obey Israel's God," Aaron told him. While Pharaoh watched, Aaron hit the water with Moses' rod, and at once it turned into blood. Pharaoh called his magicians to perform the same feat. By some trick they managed to make some water look red, like blood. "Ha!" Pharaoh snorted. "My magicians can do anything your God can do. I'm not going to let Israel go." He turned and walked back into the palace.

God left the Nile like that for a week. The fish died and floated to the surface. What a smell! Some Egyptians dug beside the river and found clear water; it was all the good water they had that week.

At the end of the week God told Moses and Aaron to ask Pharaoh again to let Israel go, and that if he refused, God would send millions of frogs. Pharaoh refused, and the frogs came. They hopped all over the country. They hid in the beds and croaked in the bread. Put a foot down to walk, and you'd find a frog under it. Pour water into a cup, and a frog would hop in before you could drink. Pharaoh shouted, "Tell Moses if he takes the frogs away, I'll let Israel go!" But as soon as the frogs died, Pharaoh said the Israelites couldn't go.

Then God sent a plague of lice, billions of them. Pharaoh scratched, the people scratched, the animals scratched. The magicians told Pharaoh, "This is the finger of God" (chap. 8:19, R.S.V.). But Pharaoh still refused to let Israel go.

So God sent swarms of flies. Then, in the next plague, the Egyptians' cattle sickened and died. In the following plague, painful boils erupted all over the bodies of the Egyptians and their animals. Then hail destroyed the Egyptians' crops and killed every person and animal left outdoors. Lightning ran along the ground. After that, clouds of locusts ate up every green leaf they could find. And then for three days darkness so black that the Egyptians had to stay indoors and think about what God was doing and how they should respond.

God didn't want to send all those plagues. He was trying to prove to Pharaoh and the Egyptians that they should respect and obey Him. Unfortunately, Pharaoh rejected every opportunity to repent and obey. During the darkness he sent for Moses and said, "Get out of my sight! Make sure you do not appear before me again! The day you see my face you will die" (chap. 10:28, N.I.V.).

Moses replied, "That's right—I won't see you again," and left.

What a bad mistake Pharaoh had made. Never again did he have a chance to repent and start obeying God.

God told Moses to gather the Israelite leaders for a very important meeting. There would be just one more plague, and the Israelites must prepare for it. "Then," God said, "Pharaoh will let you go!" It was time to start packing for the journey to the Promised Land.

When the elders came together, Moses said, "Tell all the Israelites to get ready to leave. And tell them to collect 'wages' for all the bricks they made. They are to ask the Egyptians for gold and silver jewelry. Then, on the tenth of the month, every family is to select a lamb for a special service. By the fourteenth, everyone must be packed. That evening, each family is to slay their lamb and place some of its blood on the doorposts of their homes. At midnight, God's angel will fly over the country and slay every firstborn son and every firstborn animal except where he sees the blood on the doorposts. When the Egyptians find their firstborn sons dead, they will let us go. And now," Moses said, "I must return to the palace to speak to Pharaoh."

Pharaoh was angry to see Moses again, but there was nothing he could do about it. He was even angrier when Moses told him an angel would kill the firstborn sons. He could have done something about that, but he refused to.

Ten days passed quickly. The Israelites visited the Egyptian homes asking for their "wages" and came back loaded with gold and silver jewelry.

From all over Egypt, Israelites gathered in the land of Goshen. Not all Israelite slaves had made bricks. Some worked in the fields (chap. 1:14). These now left their jobs and moved in with the Israelites in Goshen. I expect a great many boys and girls found themselves sleeping on the floor with their cousins so their aunts and uncles could have their beds. It was a happy time, especially for the children. They knew they wouldn't have to be slaves when they grew up, and what a relief that was!

On the tenth day they helped choose the lambs for Passover night. And then it was the fourteenth! In every Israelite home, parcels of clothing, food, pots and pans, and rolled-up tents leaned against walls ready to be picked up in the morning when Moses gave the signal.

But many Israelites worried, especially the oldest sons. Would the death angel see the blood on the doorposts? Might he make a mistake?

As twilight drew on, fathers all over Israel slew the lambs that had been prepared. They collected the blood in basins, then carefully brushed some of it across the top and down the sides of the door of their homes with bunches of hyssop. It was a solemn time. Only families who lived in homes that had blood on the doorposts could go to the Promised Land with all their children.

Every lamb slain that night represented Jesus, who shed His blood to save us. Because He died, you do not need to die for your sins. But you must invite Him to live inside you. When He comes, He will sprinkle His blood on the door of your heart. Then, on the final day of judgment, when others die for their sins, God will see the blood on the doorposts of your heart and will save you.

The Bible does not say that only the fathers could sprinkle the blood on the doorposts. In families where the father was dead or perhaps did not think the blood was important, mothers could put it on the doorposts. And if both parents failed, then sisters and brothers could apply the blood and save their oldest brother. It is still that way. If your father and mother don't care much about God and have no time to read the Bible or pray, then you can pray for them and for your brothers and sisters, and God will hear and answer, just as the angel saw the blood on the doorposts, no matter if it was the littlest sister in the house that put it there.

As midnight approached, the homes of the Israelites became very quiet. Not because everyone was asleep, for I am sure they were too excited to sleep. But because they were too concerned about what the death angel might do. Not even a dog barked. The Egyptians slept, trusting their heathen gods to protect them. Minutes past midnight a terribly sad and troubled cry rose from the Egyptian homes. In every house there was at least one dead. Pharaoh saw his firstborn lying lifeless on his bed.

"Get Moses and Aaron, and tell them to come here fast!" he screamed, and a frightened messenger scurried off to get them.

Through the moonlit streets, God's leaders approached the palace and calmly entered the royal throne room. Pharaoh was anything but calm. "Get out of this country!" he yelled at them. "Take your children, take your animals, take all your belongings, take everything you have, and go, and don't ever come back!"

That was the command Moses and Aaron had been waiting for! They hurried happily home to Goshen and spread the good news. By sunrise, Israelites were streaming from their homes to the places Moses had appointed for them to meet. Within hours they were lined up. After so many years of suffering, so much pain, so many disappointments, at last they were leaving! It was a struggle to get the cows and sheep in place and all the parcels fastened on the donkeys' backs. Children ran around laughing and screaming, the men and older boys shouted at the cattle. But it was a happy noise as everyone looked forward to the good days ahead.

And there! Did you hear it? The signal from Moses! Time to start! Goodbye, Egypt, goodbye, slavery! They were on their way to the Promised Land.

* * *

Now let's ask Ben and Dan about those promises God made to Abraham. Did He keep them? To find the answers, read Exodus 6:16-27. Levi came down into Egypt, and his great-grandson, Moses, led the people out. Four generations exactly.

What about the promise to Abraham? Did God keep that promise? Read Exodus 12:40, 41. The Israelites left Egypt at the end of 430 years, on "the selfsame day." So this promise too was fulfilled exactly.

Jesus has promised to take us to heaven. He has told us that He is going to come and get us soon.

Some people say you can't trust God's promises. They say Jesus isn't coming back for a long time. For the rest of the week we're going to talk about Jesus' coming and see whether He really is coming soon.

Wednesday, November 6

When will Jesus come?

We have been talking so far about when the Israelites left Egypt to begin the long journey to the Promised Land.

Today we will begin to talk about a long journey God wants us to take—all the way from earth to heaven. He has made many promises about this trip—we call them prophecies—and you can read them in the Bible. They tell us that our long journey will begin soon.

God sent Moses to lead the Israelites out of Egypt. Jesus Himself will come to take us from earth to heaven. The Israelites spent 40 years walking across a small desert to reach the Promised Land. The redeemed will ride a cloud through trillions of miles of space to get to heaven, and arrive there in just one week.

The first prophecy we'll look at is in Daniel 2. A long time ago, Nebuchadnezzar was king of Babylon. One night he dreamed about a huge statue. Its head was made of gold, its chest of silver, its belly and thighs of brass, and its legs of iron. Its feet were a mixture of iron and clay. As he watched, a stone hit the statue's feet so hard the whole thing broke in pieces. The stone spun around, faster and faster, till the pieces were ground to powder which the wind blew away. Then the stone stopped spinning and grew so big it filled the earth.

Nebuchadnezzar didn't know what the dream meant, but God explained it to Daniel, and Daniel told Nebuchadnezzar. The four metals—gold, silver, brass, and iron—meant that there would be four great empires, each ruling the world, one after another. The iron mixed with clay in the feet and toes meant that after the four empires came to an end there would be many small kings ruling a lot of small kingdoms and always quarreling among themselves. Then, said Daniel (verse 44), "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed." As the stone smashed the statue, Jesus will do away with all the little kingdoms and establish His own kingdom, which will rule the whole earth forever.

Daniel told Nebuchadnezzar that his kingdom of Babylon was the gold—the first of the four world empires. Nebuchadnezzar liked that, but he didn't like to think there would be three empires after his, so he asked his servants to make a statue all of gold and commanded everyone to bow down and worship it. He thought that way he'd make sure his kingdom would last forever. You know what happened? Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego refused to bow down, and Nebuchadnezzar threw them into a furnace, but Jesus came and walked with them there.

The prophecy worked out just as Daniel said it would. Babylon came to an end and was followed by three more world empires—Medo-Persia, whose king put Daniel in the lions' den, then Greece, and then Rome, whose soldiers crucified Jesus. Finally Rome came to an end, and today we are living in the days of the small kings. The prophecy has worked out exactly so far. All that is left is for Jesus to come.

There are many other prophecies besides this one. Here's another: God told Daniel that before Jesus comes back there would be a time of terrible trouble that would last for 1260 years. (See Dan. 7:24, 25.) That prophecy worked out exactly too, for it started in 538 and lasted till 1798, when a French army broke into a big church in Rome and took the pope prisoner. If you subtract 538 from 1798, you will find it is 1260 years.

When the disciples asked Jesus to tell them how they could know when He was coming back, He told them, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken; and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven" (Matt. 24:29, 30).

May 19, in the year 1780, the morning began to get dark around nine o'clock. It seemed as if night was coming on. Birds flew to their nests and cows walked to their barns, expecting to be milked. People lit candles because the afternoon was much too dark to read. That evening should have been bright with a full moon; instead, it was so dark that a newspaper looked just as black as the blackest velvet cloth. Around midnight the moon began to appear, as red as blood. So that sign too has been fulfilled.

The next sign Jesus gave was that the stars would fall—and that took place in November, 1833. The night of November 12-13 was clear and crisp across North America. Stars began falling soon after dark and increased so much that by midnight tens of thousands of people were outdoors watching them. Then they really began to fall! By two o'clock they were coming by the hundreds of millions, and they kept this up till daylight grew too bright to see them. True, there have been other nights when stars fell. You can see a few falling stars almost any night. But this was the greatest star shower in history. It came after the dark day and night, as Jesus said it would, and just before Jesus comes.

Maybe you can think of other signs the Bible tells us about. An angel told Daniel that at "the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased" (Dan. 12:4). Think how people used to travel until about 150 years ago—on horses or mules, or with oxen pulling heavy wagons. Then—at about the same time the stars fell—someone invented a steam locomotive. Since then people have been “running to and fro” faster and faster and farther and farther, in cars and airplanes and rockets and satellites, around the earth in minutes, and clear out to the moon and back. Certainly that prophecy has been fulfilled! We must be living in the time of the end.

When will Jesus come? God told Abraham exactly how many years would pass before the Israelites left Egypt. Jesus did not give the day and hour of His return. He said, “This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come” (Matt. 24:14).

Until just a few years ago the most people a preacher could preach to at one time was 5,000, maybe, if he had a loud voice. How different it is today when thousands of preachers are spreading the gospel over radio and television, bouncing their sermons off satellites spinning in space! The Bible societies are sending out nearly half a billion copies of Bibles and portions of Bibles every year. The gospel is going to all the world now! When will Jesus come? It won't be long!

Tomorrow we'll talk about what will happen when He comes.

Thursday, November 7

How will Jesus come?

What will happen when Jesus comes?

Jesus warned the disciples not to let anyone deceive them about His coming. Many people would claim to be Christ, He said, but if anyone told them he was Christ, or that Jesus was out in the desert or in someone's house, they must not believe it.

He explained that He would come like the lightning: “As the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be” (Matt. 24:27). No false Christ can come like this.

Later, in a vision, Jesus let John see Him coming. John wrote about it. “I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle” (Rev. 14:14).

Paul gave us another description. Maybe you have memorized it. “The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord” (1 Thess. 4:16, 17).

Someday I hope you will read Ellen White's description of her first vision. It's all about Jesus' coming. Soon after the vision she wrote about it. “While we were praying, the power of God came upon me as I had never felt it before. I seemed to be surrounded with light, and to be rising higher and higher from the earth.” God showed her the Advent people walking along a high path toward heaven. Some remained faithful; others gave up and fell off the path down into the dark world below. “Soon,” she said, “we heard the voice of God like many waters, which gave us the day and hour of Jesus' coming. The living saints, 144,000 in number, knew and understood the voice, while the wicked thought it was thunder and an earthquake. . . .

“Soon our eyes were drawn to the east, for a small black cloud had appeared, about half as large as a man's hand, which we all knew was the sign of the Son of man. In solemn silence we all gazed on the cloud as it drew nearer, and became lighter, glorious, and still more glorious, till it was a great white cloud. The bottom appeared like fire; a rainbow was over the cloud, while around it were ten thousand angels, singing a most lovely song; and upon it sat the Son of man, His hair was white and curly and lay on His shoulders, and upon His head were many crowns. His feet had the appearance of fire; in His right hand was a sharp sickle, in His left a silver trumpet. His eyes were as a flame of fire, which searched His children through and through.

“Then all faces gathered paleness, and those that God had rejected gathered blackness. Then we all cried out: ‘Who shall be able to stand? Is my robe spotless?’ The angels ceased to sing, and there was a time of awful silence, when Jesus spoke: ‘Those who have clean hands and pure hearts shall be able to stand; My grace is sufficient for you.’ At this, our faces lighted up, and joy filled every heart. And the angels struck a note higher and sang again, while the cloud drew still nearer the earth. Then Jesus. . . gazed on the graves of the sleeping saints, then raised His eyes and hands to heaven, and cried: ‘Awake! Awake! Awake! ye that sleep in the dust, and arise.’ Then there was a mighty earthquake. The graves opened, and the dead came up clothed with immortality. . . In the same moment we were changed, and caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air.

“We all entered the cloud together, and were seven days ascending to the sea of glass, when Jesus brought the crowns, and with His own right hand placed them on our heads. He gave us harps of gold and palms of victory. . . Angels were all about us as we marched over the sea of glass to the gate of the city. Jesus raised His mighty, glorious arm, laid hold of the pearly gate, swung it back on its glittering hinges, and said to us: ‘You have washed your robes in My blood, stood stiffly for My truth, enter in.’ We all marched in and felt we had a perfect right there.”—Testimonies, vol. 1, pp. 58-61.

I want to go to heaven with Jesus, don't you? Unfortunately, when Jesus comes, not everyone will welcome Him. In a vision, John saw that “the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?” (Rev. 6:15-17).

I don't want to be in that group!

Some who are planning to go to heaven with Jesus will be badly disappointed. Jesus said, “Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity” (Matt. 7:22, 23).

Can you imagine how terribly disappointed those people will be! I don't want to be among them, and you don't either.

Jesus said that the only people who will enter His kingdom will be those who do “the will of my Father which is in heaven” (verse 21).

When people asked Peter what they should do to be saved, he answered, “Repent, and be baptized.” And when the jailer asked Paul what to do, Paul answered, “Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved” (Acts 2:38; 16:31).

So the Bible is clear about what we must do to go to heaven. We must be sorry for our sins and repent and, if we are old enough, ask to be baptized. Then we must believe that Jesus forgives our sins and let Him help us to obey Him and do His will always.

Are there some of you who know there are sins in your life that you should confess to God and ask Him to forgive? If so, won't you do that right now?

Are there any who feel that the Holy Spirit is talking to you about baptism, and you'd like to raise your hand and say, “I'd like to join a baptismal class and find out more about baptism?”

Are there some who would like to bow your heads with me and ask God to help you to obey Him always and make you ready to meet Him when He comes?

Tomorrow we'll talk about heaven.

Heaven

What will heaven be like? It will be a real place, where, if you want to, you can hit a baseball and throw a basketball and kick a football farther than you ever sent one before; where you can swim and hike and ski and turn handstands and do all the other good fun things you enjoy doing here, and do them a whole lot better—and keep on improving forever!

It will be a place where you can study and learn and understand everything the teacher says. You can conduct all kinds of experiments without everyone shouting at you to be careful or you'll hurt someone, because no one will ever get hurt there. And you can visit all the interesting places you only hear about on earth. And then set out to visit stars and galaxies that are really far away!

The Bible doesn't say too much about what children will do in heaven, because you'll grow up there quite soon and then live a million billion years as an adult. And then another billion trillion years after that, of course. So mostly the Bible talks about what adults will do. But the Bible does say that children will play in the streets of New Jerusalem, which means the golden streets won't be crowded with cars and buses and motorcycles and all the other dangerous vehicles that make streets such risky places to play in here. And it says that children will have pet lions and leopards and wolves. What fun!

Would you like to read where it says those things in the Bible? Look up Zechariah 8:5 to read about playing in New Jerusalem, and Isaiah 11:6-9 to read about the big animals. Notice that you won't have to be afraid of poisonous snakes anymore. Even babies can play with big snakes safely!

No one will ever get sick in heaven! No more headaches or stomachaches or coughs or fevers or toothaches or broken bones! The Bible says, "The inhabitant shall not say, I am sick" (Isa. 33:24). Nothing will ever hurt. There won't be any more pain. Or tears. You can read that good news in Revelation 21:4.

Don't ever get the impression that if you go to heaven you'll be someone else after you get there. It will be you that's there. Let me ask you a question. If you came to school this morning in a car, were you you when you got into the car? Sure you were! When you reached school and got out of the car, were you still you? Of course! If you flew in an airplane to visit Grandpa and Grandma last summer, were you you when you got onto the plane? What about when you got off at the other end? Still you? Then you can be just as sure that when you get on the cloud to go to heaven, you will be you when you get on, and one week later, when you reach heaven and get off near the sea of glass, you will still be you. Not somebody else. To be sure, you will have a healthier body, and you'll look prettier (or more handsome), but you will still be you. (For "one week," see Testimonies, vol. 1, p. 60. For "better bodies," see 1 Cor. 15:51-53.)

While Ellen White was still a teenager, God let her visit heaven twice, in two visions. In the first, which we talked about yesterday, she visited New Jerusalem and "saw the tree of life and the throne of God. Out of the throne came a pure river of water, and on either side of the river was the tree of life. . . . The fruit . . . looked like gold mixed with silver."—Testimonies, vol. 1, p. 61. She sat down under the tree and talked to some of her friends.

In the second vision she saw New Jerusalem come down from heaven to earth, then walked around with Jesus outside the city. She wrote, "We began to look at the glorious things outside of the city. There I saw most beautiful houses, that had the appearance of silver, supported by four pillars set with pearls, most glorious to behold, which were to be inhabited by the saints, and in which was a golden shelf. I saw many of the saints go into the houses, take off their glittering crowns and lay them on the shelf, then go out into the field by the houses to do something with the earth." A little later, she says, "We entered a field full of all kinds of beasts—the lion, the lamb, the leopard, and the wolf, all together in perfect union. We passed through the midst of them, and they followed on peaceably after. . . . As we were traveling along, we met a company who were also gazing at the glories of the place. I noticed red as a border on their garments; their crowns were brilliant; their robes were pure white. As we greeted them, I asked Jesus who they were. He said they were martyrs that had been slain for Him. With them was an innumerable company of little ones; they had a hem of red on their garments also. . . . I saw the little ones climb, or, if they chose, use their little wings and fly to the top of the mountains, and pluck the never-fading flowers."

After a while Jesus said to her, "'You must go back to the earth again, and relate to others what I have revealed to you.'" Then an angel carried Ellen gently back to earth. It seemed so dark! She told her friends, "Sometimes I think I can stay here no longer, all things of earth look so dreary. I feel very lonely here, for I have seen a better land."—Testimonies, vol. 1, pp. 68-70.

What do you look forward to most about heaven? How about playing? If you play baseball, and you slide into second base, will your knee get skinned? If it does, will it bleed? Or will the skin heal very quickly, maybe right while you're watching it? I don't know, but I'd like to. It's one of the reasons why I want to go to heaven, so I can find out! If the batter hits the ball way up in the air, will you be able to fly up with your wings to catch it? I don't know. Sure would be fun! It's something else I want to find out about.

How about food? What's your favorite? Think about all the fruit you like best—oranges and apples and watermelons and apricots and peaches—all ripe and juicy and waiting to be picked and eaten!

Do you like science? Do you have a lot of questions you're curious about? I do. Why does a mother dog always have dogs and never kittens? How does an oak tree know how to arrange its branches so it always looks like an oak, while a fir tree always arranges its branches so it looks like a Christmas tree? Trees don't have brains. How do they know where to put their branches? What are some of the questions you want answers to? Think of it, we can ask the angels; they've been around so long, they'll probably be able to answer all of them. But if we stump them, we can go and ask Jesus. He knows all the answers!

The best part of heaven will be meeting Jesus, talking to Him, and listening to all the interesting things He has to say. And if you'd like to climb on His lap and snuggle down in His arms, I'm sure He'll let you.

Heaven is such a wonderful place; I hope you are asking Jesus every day to help you get ready so you can be there.

Sabbath, November 9

Why Jesus waits

What will happen between now and when Jesus comes?

You will remember that a couple of days ago we talked about the signs of Jesus' coming. Almost all the signs we talked about have been fulfilled. I hope you are asking, Are there any other signs that haven't been fulfilled yet? Let's look in the Bible and see.

Read Revelation 6:12-17 and list the signs mentioned there: earthquake, dark day, dark night, falling stars, heaven parted as a scroll, Jesus comes. The earthquake happened on November 1, 1755. Large parts of north Africa and nearly the whole of Europe were shaken by a terrible earthquake; Lisbon, Portugal, and many other cities were destroyed. The dark day and night occurred in 1780, the stars fell in 1833, but the heavens have not yet parted as a scroll.

This is one of the few things that must happen before Jesus comes.

Another is the seven last plagues. Read about them in Revelation 16. First, terrible sores will break out on people who have the mark of the beast, then the seas and rivers will turn to blood, and the sun will become so hot it will scorch people with fire. The fifth plague will be a mysterious darkness, the sixth plague will be the battle of Armageddon. Finally, in the seventh plague there will be thunders and lightnings and the worst earthquake the world has ever known. Islands will sink into the ocean, cities beside the sea will be swamped with water, mountains will disappear, and huge hailstones will crush houses and schools and churches and factories and the people inside them. These plagues will be far worse than the plagues of Egypt, but notice that they fall on people who have the mark of the beast. But sure you don't have the mark.

Read about the mark in Revelation 13:11-18. This prophecy means that before Jesus comes there will be just two groups of people in the world: those who worship and obey Jesus and those who obey Satan and have the mark of the beast. The people who worship and obey Jesus will have the seal of God, which means they keep the Sabbath faithfully and live like Jesus all week long. The people who obey Satan will have the mark of the beast, which means they reject the Sabbath and say that Sunday is the right day to worship. Which group you belong to will be very important, because the people who choose the seal of God will be persecuted by the people who have the mark of the beast. If you keep the Sabbath, you won't be able to buy or sell, and eventually there will be a law that you must be killed. If you accept the mark of the beast, you will be able to buy and sell, and you won't be persecuted; but the people who have the mark of the beast suffer the seven last plagues and will die when Jesus comes. The people who love and obey Jesus will be saved when Jesus comes and will live in heaven forever. Which group do you choose to belong to?

I say "choose," because the choice is up to you. Jesus died to wash away your sins, and He lives to make sure you get all the help you need to overcome bad habits. Do you choose to ask Jesus to forgive your sins? He will, if you ask Him, but only if you ask. Do you choose to ask Jesus to help you to be loving and kind and obedient and truthful every day? He will help you, but only if you ask. Your mother and father cannot carry you into heaven. Your teachers cannot drag you there. Only Jesus can take you to heaven, and you must ask. You must choose. The decision is yours.

"Christ has given us no assurance that to attain perfection of character is an easy matter. A noble, all-round character is not inherited. It does not come to us by accident. A noble character is earned by individual effort through the merits and grace of Christ. God gives the talents, the powers of the mind; we form the character. It is formed by hard, stem battles with self. . . .

"Let no one say, I cannot remedy my defects of character. . . . As the will of man cooperates with the will of God, it becomes omnipotent. Whatever is to be done at His command may be accomplished in His strength. All His biddings are enablings."—Christ's Object Lessons, pp. 331-333. That means that you and God together can conquer Satan every time he tempts you to do wrong.

The seven last plagues and the parting of the heavens won't take very long; they will happen only at the very end. So what really is keeping Jesus from coming? Just two things. First, taking the gospel to all the world—and we've seen how fast that can be finished. The other thing He's waiting for is for you to become like Him. Listen to this: "Christ is waiting with longing desire for the manifestation of Himself in His church. When the character of Christ shall be perfectly reproduced in His people, then He will come to claim them as His own."—Christ's Object Lessons, p. 69.

Away back in the beginning, Satan told the angels in heaven that God's commandments were too hard to obey. He told them that they would be much better off if they disobeyed God and obeyed him instead. Many of the angels believed him, and many of the others just weren't quite sure but that maybe he was right. Perhaps God did ask too much; perhaps His commandments were too hard to obey.

God is looking for people on earth who will prove to all the angels in the universe that He has not asked too much. Would you like to be one of God's champions, and prove that God can be obeyed? That even nowadays, when there are so many temptations, boys and girls can be pure and kind and true and faithful and loving and thoughtful and helpful all the time—just like Jesus? That's what Jesus is waiting for—to give you a little more time to become like Him.

How much longer will Jesus wait? I don't know. I hear people say it will be a long, long time. They say we shouldn't pay attention to the prophecies. Do you remember how it was before the Israelites left Egypt? A few people said, "God always keeps His promises." But most of the people—like Ben—scoffed. They said, "Look how strong Egypt is. We will never get out." Then, suddenly, God changed everything. He called Moses back from herding sheep and in just three or four months turned Egypt upside down. He destroyed its farms, embarrassed its heathen priests, upset its government, destroyed its powerful army—and got the Israelites out on time, exactly when He had said He would.

So never doubt that Jesus will come soon. He will come so quickly that almost everyone will be surprised. He promised it again and again. He said, "Behold, I come quickly" (Rev. 3:11). And again He said it, "Behold, I come quickly" (chap. 22:7). And then a third time, "Surely I come quickly" (verse 20). There is no doubt about it. He will come quicker and sooner than most people expect. He will keep His promise.

May each of you be ready and waiting for Him, so He can take all of you to live in heaven with Him.

JESUS IS COMING AGAIN

Sabbath, November 1

ARE YOU AWAKE?

It was 2:00 a.m. when she opened her eyes to the pale moonlight glowing through the curtains. The muttering of the night insects and the occasional shriek from a bird in the jungle were the only sounds except for the steady breathing of her husband.

"Honey," she said, patting his shoulder. But it took more than that to wake him up. As principal of a mission boarding school, he worked hard. And at night he slept deeply.

"Honey," she repeated, shaking him harder this time. "I've just had this incredible dream. It was so exciting and so upsetting. I just have to tell you about it right now."

The eagerness of her voice brought him fully awake. "A dream?" he echoed astonished.

"Oh, yes!" she exclaimed. "It was all so vivid. I was standing in our garden when I looked up and saw a cloud the size of a man's hand. I kept on watching, thinking, Maybe this is Jesus coming. As I gazed it became larger and brighter till I could see a brilliant center to the cloud and I knew it was Jesus. Soon I could see His crown above His loving face. His eyes seemed to be looking into mine, and I was so happy and full of love for Him I could not think of anything else. Then I noticed the angels—thousands of them.

"Jesus had come at last. I wondered where you were because I wanted to share this wonderful moment with you, so I ran to the school, calling your name. 'Jesus is coming! Jesus is coming!' I shouted. You came out to watch with me. I was so glad that we were both ready for Him.

"Then I thought of the other teachers and their families and the students. So I raced around the campus, knocking on doors, rushing inside buildings, and grabbing everyone I found by the hand and sharing my wonderful news that Jesus had come at last.

"Nobody wanted to listen. They stared at me coldly and turned away, shutting their doors behind them. I couldn't believe it. Tears ran down my cheeks as I pleaded with them to come and welcome Him. Didn't they want Him to come? Hadn't they been waiting for Him to come too?

"Outside when I was standing beside you again, my heart thrilled at the sight of the Saviour. But I longed to share that joy with everyone here at school.

"And then I woke up. It was only a dream, but it seemed so real. If you could have seen Jesus . . ."

The missionary and his wife talked for an hour about that dream. Of course, they were sure that there were teachers and students in their school who were waiting for Jesus to come and who would welcome Him when He came. But they wanted every boy and girl in their school to be awake to His soon coming.

When Jesus lived on earth He looked down to the end of time and realized that some people who knew about His coming would lack the interest and energy to prepare for it. So He told the story of the ten virgins. Five of them would be sufficiently prepared for the coming of the bridegroom, and five of them would not bother to make the necessary effort. The Bible says, "So, when the bridegroom was delayed, they [all] lay down to rest" (Matt. 25:5, TLB). After the others had gone inside, the five who were not ready came and knocked on the door and cried, "Lord, Lord, open to us. But he answered and said, . . . I know you not" (verses 11, 12).

At this end-time we all know that Jesus is coming soon. We all, like the foolish young women in the parable, are waiting for Him to come. We even know His name, as they did when they called to Him, "Lord, Lord." But we need to do more than that.

Paul, in Romans 13:11, told church members to "awake out of sleep." Of course, he was not talking about people snoozing off during the church service. He was talking about spiritual laziness. As Christians we must be awake to the signs of Jesus' soon coming. We need to get to know Him better by reading His Word, talking to Him, learning to love Him, so that we will be excited about seeing Him face-to-face, because He is our friend. And we will want to share all this with others because He is special to us.

If at this very moment a small cloud appeared in the sky and that cloud became larger and brighter until we could see the shining of God's glory with thousands of angels around the King of kings, wouldn't you want to run outside and welcome Him?

None of us would want to rush back inside and close the door on the most exciting event of our lives.

Wake up today! Jesus is waiting for you. Learn from His Word the signs of His soon coming. Talk to Him. Listen to Him. Soon you will see Him face-to-face!

BY URSULA M. HEDGES

Sunday, November 2

SEEING JESUS

Everyone sat so still. Softly the organ music filled the chapel, comforting each listener.

Mark, sitting in the front row, his back straight, his eyes gazing straight ahead, tried to think of ordinary things. But it did not work. He could smell the roses and carnations. As he eyed the polished wood of the casket he found it hard to believe that his dear grandmother was inside it.

Gran hadn't seemed that old to Mark. Before she took ill, her garden always looked like a picture in a magazine, and she could probably outdo the best of cooks. Best of all, when you were with her she made you feel special, and you wanted to live up to her ideal for you. She had been a real Christian lady.

"One day," the minister was saying, "'God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any pain: for the former things are passed away.'" (Rev. 21:4).

The Bible says that we should not be ignorant about those who are asleep in death, for we have a wonderful hope. When Jesus comes, our loved ones who have died will hear the voice of Jesus and rise to live forever.

Mark felt sure that Gran would be resurrected with a new, healthy body, looking with joy into Jesus' face.

Our earthly bodies, which grow old and sick, will be changed and made perfect at the Second Coming. Think of what that would mean to you if you were blind. If you were a paraplegic you could throw away your wheelchair and run. Those who have cancer or some other disease will never know another sick day or painful treatment. Jesus has promised that there will be no more pain or sorrow or death and that there will be no more tears.

Those of you who have hassles with your math lessons will be glad that all the stress is over. And that's not the end of the good news. Suppose you wish that you were thinner or taller or prettier so that people would like you better. You won't need to worry; you will all look great! Everyone will be accepted for what he or she is; everyone will be loved by Jesus and His children. Think of the peace of never hearing another argument, of never having Satan to bother you again!

The apostle Paul understood trouble and stress, for he was hated for his preaching, beaten, put in jail, shipwrecked. He couldn't wait for Christ's second coming. He said, "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are [absolutely nothing] compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us" (Rom. 8:18). Then we shall be heirs together with Christ.

Roseanne and Richard listened in silence as their dad told them about his promotion. It would mean moving to a new location. Neither of the children wanted to go, and they let Dad know it by their glum faces. After all, they had lived in this city all of their lives. Here were their friends, their Pathfinder Club, and all of their interests. It wasn't fair. They thought about the house, too, where they had their own comfortable rooms, and the garden, where they had special nooks in which to think or read or share secrets with their friends. They loved it where they were. But it was no use complaining because their parents went on cheerfully planning what to pack and what to sell and what they would do when they arrived at their new house.

Hard to Say Goodbye

When all the curtains were removed, the house looked with sad, unblinking eyes at them. Their goodbyes to their friends were hard to say. Then Dad started the engine, and the car sped down the highway, while Roseanne and Richard sniffled in the back seat.

Two days later Dad headed the car into a sweeping tree-lined drive leading to a beautiful house. The children were surprised when they found out that this was to be their new home and that in the backyard was an enormous swimming pool plus lots of space in which to play. But when they learned that over the back fence was a grassed area where they could keep a horse, their happiness overflowed.

That story reminds us just a little of the houses Jesus is making ready for us. The name Adventist means that we are waiting for Jesus' return, and our hope that He will come again is tremendous. Listen to His words: "Let not your heart be troubled. . . I go to prepare a place for you. And . . . I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John 14:1-3). We can't even begin to imagine what He has in store for us. But more than any wonderful house He is preparing for me, I want to see Jesus, don't you?

Monday, November 3

READY OR NOT, A NEW DAY

Mel could tell by the twittering of birds that it would soon be dawn. He pulled his pillow snugly under his neck and tugged the blankets to cover his face, hoping to drift off to sleep again. He didn't want to face this day with its history test. But he couldn't get back to sleep. Soon he heard his sister's bedroom door open, and then the faint sounds of breakfast preparation filtered in from the kitchen, where Mother was busy. At last his alarm went off, and as his head slowly emerged from the bedclothes he could see sunlight glowing on his bedroom wall. There was no way he could hold back the dawn. Ready or not, a new day had come.

This is the kind of picture Romans 13:12 gives us of the world: "The night is far gone, the day of his return will soon be here" (TLB). The night in this text means the sin and unhappiness of the world. The night is going to disappear, and the light of a new kind of day will begin at Jesus' second coming.

How did Mel know that it was nearly dawn? He could tell by the signs. He heard the twittering birds, the opening of his sister's door, the sounds of breakfast preparation, and then the loud ring of his alarm clock. When he opened his eyes he could see the gleams of the early morning sun.

God has given us signs to show us that

His coming is very near and that it is time to wake up, too. See how many you can count today as we talk about them.

Matthew 24:29 tells us that in the last days the sun will "be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." This was fulfilled on May 19, 1780, on the great Dark Day. The Bible tells us that falling stars would be another sign, and this took place on November 13, 1833, in a great meteor shower. That all happened a long time ago. But there are still things to watch for today.

Take your left wrist, for example. If you are wearing an automatic watch it could be seen as a sign that Jesus will come soon. Daniel 12:4 says that we should look for an increase in knowledge. Technology is already advanced enough to produce not just a digital watch with an alarm, but one with many functions—even a mini TV screen so that you can watch your favorite program.

Can we who live in a modern society imagine life without radio and television, canned and frozen foods, automobiles and airplanes? When Daniel said that many should run to and fro upon the earth, he was describing our very age, not an earlier time in history.

Luke mentions another sign of Jesus' soon coming when he says that there will be strife and conflict among nations (Luke 21:9, 10). It is just like the news headlines of any day of the week with riots, fighting, and refugees. People are filled with anxiety as they look at what is happening around them. They worry about nuclear war or disease or something else. The Bible says that in the last days men's hearts will fail them for fear (verse 26).

We can expect to see signs in the wicked way people behave. Second Timothy 3 gives us a long list of their attitudes. As you listen you may be surprised to find your city or town being described. "You may as well know . . . that in the last days it is going to be very difficult to be a Christian. For people will love only themselves and their money; they will be proud and boastful, sneering at God, disobedient to their parents, ungrateful to them, and thoroughly bad. They will be hard-headed . . . ; they will be constant liars and troublemakers and will think nothing of immorality. They will be rough and cruel. . . . They will be hotheaded, puffed up with pride, and prefer good times to worshiping God. They will go to church, . . . but they won't really believe anything they hear. Don't be taken in by people like that" (verses 1-5, TLB).

What a lot of signs! I am sure that you are able to recognize them in the world around you today because that is how things are. The night of wickedness of this world is soon to finish, and Jesus is coming to bring in a new day of righteousness. No matter how we try, we can't hold back the dawn, and I'm glad that the joyful dawn of Christ's return is about to break.

How many signs did you count up? There are plenty, but did you know that you are a sign too? If you fit in with some of those bad attitudes, then you are a sign—a bad sign. But if you have given yourself to Jesus and are living for Him, you are a good sign, for Revelation 14:12 indicates that there will be faithful, patient people ready for His coming. I want to be that kind of sign, don't you? A sign that the dawn of God's wonderful new day is about to break.

Tuesday, November 4

THE SECRET FORMULA

The Australian timber workers listened with growing alarm. They knew the prearranged code for an accident. Three whistle blasts told of a bad accident, but now they counted six—the signal that someone had died. Hurriedly they downed tools and rushed to the mill. But no one had been hurt, let alone killed. It was a mystery. Who had blown those six clear whistle blasts?

Hidden on a moss-covered log, the culprit with his dark-brown body and spectacular tail feathers sat unconcerned, eating a worm. The Australian superb lyrebird is thought to be an even finer mimic than Australia's bowerbird or the North American mockingbird. He has been known to reproduce the calls of at least 20 different birds, and to mimic tapping typewriters, ax blows, auto engines, words, and even several bars of piano and violin music. Of course, even though he has deceived countless people with his mimicry, he is innocent of crime. But you cannot say the same of the way Satan deceives us into doing evil.

And you can't say the same for Jocelyn, who is always making up stories about her friends and stretching the truth. Romans 13:12 pleads with us to "quit the evil deeds of darkness" (TLB). That means the Christian must get rid of sins and weaknesses. Jocelyn says she can't help it. The lies just come out without her meaning to say them.

Then there are Glen and Gerry, the Watson brothers, who are really great boys, except that they always quarrel. Glen doesn't hate Gerry. It's just become a habit to argue with him, and Gerry fights back. They sure want to "quit the evil deeds" the Bible is talking about, but how to stop is the problem. They've tried and failed.

Jennifer's problem is jealousy. Every time Wendy wears a new dress or Cindy tells about her super holidays or Nicole rides her new bicycle, sharp little knives of jealousy stab into Jennifer's heart. She is never happy with what she has. She has tried to overcome her jealousy, but hasn't been successful.

As you think about your own life and the sins and weaknesses that trip you up, do you wonder if they will always trap you? Do you know the secret formula for quitting these evil deeds? It will work for Jocelyn's lying, Glen and Gerry's quarreling, and Jennifer's jealousy. And it will work for you, too.

The secret formula (in code, of course) is DP + MC. In fact, DP + MC will even help you agree with the apostle James when he asks, "Is your life full of difficulties and temptations? Then be happy, for when the way is rough, your patience has a chance to grow. So let it grow, and don't try to squirm out of your problems" (James 1:2-4, TLB). Wouldn't it be wonderful if your problems didn't bug you so much? Imagine the feeling!

Then here is the meaning of the secret code. DP stands for Divine Power and MC stands for My Cooperation. Divine Power plus My Cooperation is sure to help you quit those evil deeds.

But knowing the meaning of the secret code is only the first step. The next is action. If we want Divine Power, God's power to help us, then listen to this: "But ask the Lord Jesus Christ to help you live as you should, and don't make plans to enjoy evil" (Rom. 13:14, TLB). Do you enjoy evil? That may be the problem. There goes the MC part—My Cooperation. I have to be willing to give up those bad deeds and not want them anymore. I have to ask God to take away my desire to do those things. Then Divine Power can work with My Cooperation for success.

Satan has more tricks than any lyrebird. He is busy trying to deceive all of us. When he tells you what fun you can have doing things that you know are wrong, ask God to take away your desire to listen to the old liar. You need DP every time Satan tempts you.

Say to God, "Here is MC, My Cooperation. I have decided to follow You. Take away my wish to sin. Give me Your Divine Power to overcome temptation"—to tell lies, to argue, to be jealous, or whatever your problem is. And right then those evil deeds will be thrown off like an old coat into the trash. Instead of planning to enjoy evil, you can plan to enjoy those things that are good. That enjoyment will last forever.

Try the secret code today. DP + MC is powerful. Paul tried it, and it worked for him. I've tried it, and it works for me. It will work for you, too. Plug into DP.

Wednesday, November 5

Go ON, SOLDIER!

When London was being heavily bombed during the Second World War, people showed how they felt about the fighting by the way they behaved. There were brave pilots, like John, who tried desperately to defend their country against the attackers. There was 4-year-old Amelia who was missing during an air raid, only to be found unharmed and still hiding under her bed when the danger had passed.

And there were people like old Ron Smith, who became so terrified when the siren wailed out one night that he jumped into his trousers and rushed down the dark stairs ahead of his wife. Suddenly he crumpled up and cried, "I've been hit, Annie. I've been hit!"

But his wife just giggled and said, "Yes, you've been hit, lovey, but only by your suspenders, which were trailing behind you. I stood on them for an instant as you rushed out, and then they snapped back and hit you."

We as Christians have a war to fight. Satan and his evil angels are trying hard to conquer us through all kinds of temptations and troubles. Some of us are trying to win the war like John; some of us just want to run and hide like little Amelia; some of us are like old Ron Smith, giving up before we have really started.

In Ephesians 6 Paul describes the special armor and weapon the Christian needs to win this war. He lists six important pieces of equipment that will help us to defend our minds against Satan's attacks.

The first is the belt of truth, the very opposite of Satan's deceiving lies. We can believe everything God says, for He is reliable. To wear this belt of truth, we need to know God well and understand what He says. Then we will be strong to fight Satan's attacks.

The breastplate of righteousness is very important. A military breastplate covers the heart of the soldier and protects his life, just as the righteousness of Christ will cover us and give us life. When you ask God to help you overcome sins and weaknesses, He will; then you will not want to do evil. God has chosen you as a soldier. He wants you to wear His righteousness as a breastplate covering a heart full of love for Him.

In Bible times Roman soldiers covered their legs and wore sandals on their feet. This protected them from cuts and bruises and helped them to move quickly and safely. So we come to the third piece of Christian armor. The Bible says, "Wear shoes that are able to speed you on as you preach the Good News of peace with God" (verse 15, TLB). As Adventists waiting for Jesus to come, we must share this exciting good news with others. This is the gospel of peace—peace from the troubles of this world. This will encourage people and give them hope to know that the Christ who was crucified, resurrected, and rose to heaven will come again.

Shield of Faith

The fourth piece of armor is the shield of faith. A Roman soldier carried a large oblong wooden shield covered with leather. Because it measured about four feet by two and one-half feet it was large enough to protect his body. Our faith in God will give us the victory over Satan's fiery darts. Are you using your faith in God as a shield?

Since your head is a vital part of your body, it needs special protection. Ephesians 6:17 says, "You will need the helmet of salvation" (TLB). The salvation God wants you to have covers your sins. It gives you strength to live faithfully for Him today. And it gives you the hope of eternal life. God's message of salvation is a special protection against Satan's attacks.

And, number six, the same verse says, "You will need . . . the sword of the Spirit—which is the Word of God" (TLB). Do you read His Word every day? It will help you a lot in fighting Satan's attacks.

Let us decide to put on the whole armor that God offers us. God has promised us victory, so we don't need to be scared like Amelia, hiding under her bed. What God spoke to Joshua at the borders of the Promised Land, He says to us today: "Be bold and strong! Banish fear and doubt! For remember, the Lord your God is with you wherever you go" (Joshua 1:9, TLB).

Go on, soldier—to victory with God.

Thursday, November 6

WALK FOR YOUR LIFE

C'mon, Aussie, c'mon, c'mon. C'mon, Aussie, c'mon!" cheered the crowd at the top of their voices as the game got under way.

Paul in Romans 13 is really saying something a lot like that. "Come on, Christian. Come on and walk the way Christ walked. Come on and behave honestly and decently, and remember that Jesus is coming soon. Your life should have a special style to it in the way you relate to Christ and to others."

Because your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, you will care for your health. That means that what you eat and drink is important to you, so you will choose what is healthful. When Les decided to follow Christ he thought seriously about all the candy bars and ice cream he bought with his pocket money, and he cut the amount he ate right down. Since you have decided to follow Jesus, you will shun alcohol, tobacco, drugs, and unclean meats. You will want to keep up a good exercise program, and make sure that you get to bed at a sensible hour each night to get in sufficient rest.

As teenage Janelle read Paul's advice "Let us conduct ourselves becomingly as in the day" (verse 13, RSV), she looked critically at her clothes and had to admit that she wouldn't want to be dressed in some of them when Jesus returned. That meant changing her style of dress.

Have you chosen to follow Jesus? That's good! But listen to this. It's a very important point to understand. Once you have chosen to follow Jesus you can no longer choose who you want to love, because, like Jesus, you have to love everybody. That's pretty heavy, isn't it? But that's not all. When you decide to be a Christian you can no longer choose how you will behave. That's right! By choosing Jesus you now should walk in His way, the way of life. You should behave in His way—the way of life.

As Louise realized what walking in the way of Christ meant, she knew that the way she talked would have to change. Having chosen to follow Jesus, she had no other choice but to stop using some expressions and finding fault with other people. Now she would behave like Jesus.

Jesus Makes It Easy

Arnie, her brother, decided that the movie-star posters in his room didn't give anyone a clue that he was now a Christian. He thought that it would be hard to pull them down, but surprisingly, loving Jesus made it pretty easy. He put his Bible on his bedside stand. Instead of letting it decorate the bookcase, he opened and read it morning and evening. He became excited at the way the Holy Spirit was talking to his heart through the Bible. His behavior changed. He became more helpful around the house. He started talking about spiritual things to his friends. He was walking in the way of Jesus and loving it.

If Paul were the pastor of Arnie's church, I can imagine him standing at the door after church and shaking Arnie's hand. Let's sneak up and listen to the conversation.

"Thanks for that sermon, Pastor Paul."

Pastor Paul smiles at him. "Arnie, I know that you are walking in the way of Jesus. Keep it up through the strength of God."

"Oh, I will. I want to. I ask Him every day for help," replies Arnie as Pastor Paul grips his hand.

"And, Arnie . . ."

"Yes, Pastor Paul?"

"Let your love for God and your behavior be a witness that Jesus will come back soon. Walk honestly, decently. Walk for your life. Walk the way of Christ!"

"Yes, I want to. I will," replies Arnie sincerely.

And what about you? Will you be like Arnie? Come on, Christian. Come on. Walk the way of Christ. Walk for your life—your eternal life. Come on, Christian, come on with Jesus walking beside you. Soon you'll see Him face-to-face.

Friday, November 7

FRIENDSHIP WITH CHRIST

Ron and Linda were engaged. It was all very exciting, and you could tell by just looking at them how wrapped up they were in each other. Then Ron had to be away on his work, which took him to another city miles from Linda. They promised to write and phone often, for they were very much in love.

When Ron's first letters came, Linda couldn't wait to read every word, treasuring all that he said. But one day when the postman brought Linda a letter from Ron, she read only the first paragraph because she was so busy and had no time to read all that he said. At bedtime she was too tired to read the rest, so she fell asleep with the letter on her bedside table.

In every letter Ron wrote he told Linda he loved her, he mentioned their plans for marriage, and he told her when he hoped to be back with her, but usually she managed only the first half page. She was glad that he still loved her—that was all that was really important.

One day she called him on the phone. "Hi, dear," she said. "Thanks for the presents you sent me. Please send some more tomorrow. I'm too tired to talk anymore. I love you. Bye." And she put down the receiver.

You find that story hard to believe? I can't blame you, because you don't expect people in love to behave like that. You would expect Linda to keep on eagerly reading Ron's letters and writing to him, too. You would expect her to be glad for every minute she has to speak to Ron on the phone, because she loves him. As for her greed about the presents, you were probably disgusted. You didn't think much of her. You'd probably say that Linda doesn't really love Ron, and you'd be right.

But wait a minute. Could it be that we are very much like Linda in our relationship with Jesus Christ? We say we love Him. We want to spend the rest of our lives with Him, but do we read His letters to us? If we are in a hurry and read only a sentence or two from the Bible without taking proper notice of His messages, we are behaving like Linda. Perhaps Linda's shocking conversation on the phone to Ron, thanking him for his presents and asking for more without giving him a chance to talk, is like the way we pray to God.

If Christ is to be the Lord of your life, you should remember three important ways of building a good friendship with Him. The Bible tells us that the Scriptures testify (or speak) of Him (John 5:39), so if we want to get to know Him we need to read His Word carefully and thoughtfully. Take time. Don't rush. Say to Him, "What message do You have for me today, Lord? Let Your Holy Spirit guide my mind."

And He will. You'll be surprised what He wants to tell you. You won't be able to wait to find out the special message in His daily love letter to you.

The second way of keeping up a good relationship with God is through prayer. Remember Linda on the phone? Do you just take a list of what you want from God and read it off to Him? That's a pity, because prayer should be like a two-way conversation between friends. Don't ignore God's part of the conversation. Quietly listen for God to impress your mind when you've finished talking. Find a place in your home where you can privately read your Bible and pray. Go there every day whether you feel like it or not, whether you are tired or discouraged or on top of the world.

Jesus knew how important His time of private worship was when He was on earth. He never missed talking to the God He loved and listened for His messages. That was His secret of success. That was His example for us.

And then He went out and fulfilled the third important point. He witnessed. For us that means sharing the joy of our friendship with God with those around us. It will make our relationship with God stronger.

Have you ever been to a wedding and listened in the beautifully decorated church as the bride and groom exchange vows? Did you hear the bride, looking like a princess in her white gown and veil, promise to serve her new husband 54,750 meals during the next 50 years, as well as preparing more at each meal if they have children? It wouldn't sound right! But she does promise to love him, and all that she does for him over the years is because of that love. It is the same with him; he washes dishes and mows lawns because he loves her.

Loving and working for Him is the way it is with us Christians when Christ is the Lord of our lives. This is what Paul wanted us to do when he said in Romans 13:14, "But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." How about you? Is Christ the Lord of your life?

Sabbath, November 8

MAKING JESUS NUMBER ONE

Robert was good on the trumpet. His teacher said so. His friends said so. Everyone said so. When the principal asked him to play at the school concert he said he would. Finding a suitable piece of music took a little time, but eventually he chose a fairly easy number and tried it out a couple of times.

But Robert was busy, and it was the start of the swimming season too. He liked to join his friends down at the town pool and just fool around. Because the weather was steaming up, swimming was the perfect activity.

By the time he came home, ate, and did his chores, he didn't feel like practicing the trumpet. Anyway, swimming made him tired. Once his mother asked him how he was doing with his piece for the concert, so he took a little time to practice.

Is Christ the Lord of your life?

Then suddenly it was concert day. Robert was really surprised at how quickly it came up, like a friend creeping up behind him and yelling Boo! in his ear. Desperately he tried out the piece while Mother put dinner on the table. Although he said that he didn't have time to eat, she insisted that he sit down with the rest of the family. Then it was time to drive to the concert.

If Only

As Robert stepped out onto the stage, his trumpet glinting richly in the lights, people clapped in anticipation of an excellent performance. But it wasn't. The timing was strange. A high note cracked. Robert's stomach seemed to be full of bricks, and he was glad to escape while the sound of feeble clapping followed him offstage. If only he'd given it his best. If only he'd practiced faithfully. How he wished he could go back to those afternoons when he had fooled around with his friends, and practice his trumpet instead!

Now imagine Rod. He is an athlete who has been training and running for years. Many times he has missed out on a placing in races but he has kept at his athletics. In trying to build a healthy body, he changed his diet to include whole grain foods and lots of vegetables and fruit, and he drank lots of water. Giving up junk foods such as ice cream wasn't easy, but his goal of athletic excellence meant more to him than these foods.

Rod, a New Zealander, is running a marathon. "Never give up!" he tells himself, pushing on, mile after grueling mile. "Have confidence that you will make it!" he encourages himself as weariness hits him, and this helps him to keep going, legs pumping, lungs bursting. Twenty-six miles of run, run, run. Only a short stretch remains to the finish line and Smith is still ahead of Rod.

Now Rod throws himself forward, sheer willpower pushing his legs. He comes abreast of Smith. He moves ahead. For the last 385 yards he is in front. His chest touches the tape as he comes in first. The winner—Rod Dixon! "How did you do it, Rod?" he is asked.

"Total commitment and years of discipline," he answers with a grin.

That sounds like Paul in Philippians 3:13,14: "I am still not all I should be but I am bringing all my energies to bear on this one thing: Forgetting the past and looking forward to what lies ahead, I strain to reach the end of the race and receive the prize for which God is calling us up to heaven because of what Christ Jesus did for us" (TLB).

Not one of us Christians can succeed in our spiritual lives if we don't put God first. It takes a new decision to follow Him every day. We may need to surrender some things we want to do, like Robert, who fooled around instead of getting on with his trumpet practice. Jesus knew all about this when He said in Luke 9:23, "Anyone who wants to follow me must put aside his own desires and conveniences and carry his cross with him every day and keep close to me!" (TLB).

You can be sure that by keeping Jesus and heaven as number one in your life you will have the happiest life in this world as well as a whole new exciting time for eternity. Do you think that goal is too costly? Don't be deceived by Satan. That's his lie.

When Jesus comes again in glory He will call you faithful ones by your names. One by one you will come, and He will give you a new name for eternity and place a crown on your head. Then as a harp is placed in your hand you will join in perfectly with the harmony of thousands who have been saved, to play and sing your praises to the King of kings. And remember, that won't be the end; it will be only the beginning of even more wonderful things.

This is the one most important thing in my life—to be ready for the coming of Jesus. This very moment I promise Him that I will follow Him and wait for Him. Won't you join me?

Ursula M. Hedges writes from Brisbane, Australia.

... and then one week—as far as Martin Setchel could tell—his worldwide church ceased to exist.

One week, Mr. Setchel lost contact with the other 4.5 million members of his church. News of how God was blessing Adventists in other states and countries stopped.

You see, his subscription to the Adventist Review lapsed because he misplaced the renewal notice. He could no longer read the articles that sparked new thoughts and helped him live a victorious life in Christ.

Don't risk losing contact with the world church, even for a week. Extend your subscription by mailing this coupon now.

Please send me another 40 issues of the Review, US$26.95.*

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

State/Zip _____

☐ Payment enclosed ☐ Bill me

☐ Visa/MasterCard Expires _____

Card No. _____

*This offer expires December 31, 1986. Ohio residents, please add $7.95 for 12 monthly editions sponsored by the North American Division. Mail to: Subscriber Services

Box 1119, Hagerstown, MD 21741

615-01-0

The Second Coming of Jesus

The great hope of the church still beams brightly.

It was an event long anticipated, heralded by seer and minstrel in sermon and song—the first coming of Christ. Pregnant mothers waited expectantly for the birth of a male, each hoping that hers would be the promised Messiah. The cultivation of this hope was a studied, practiced thing. It was the dream of every daughter of Abraham that the Messiah would come and that the powerparenthood would be hers.

But the long years of expectancy brought its problems, and hope deferred made the recitation of the Messianic promises a ritual without meaning. Others applied the promises to a temporal, earthly kingdom: Messiah would come and sit on the throne of David, rule Israel's enemies with a rod of iron, and the Jewish race would enjoy the "milk and honey" of Canaan.

Unexpected, Unrecognized

The prophets had predicted the place of His birth and the approximate time of His appearance on earth. Yet those who had been the beneficiaries of advanced information benefited least from His life. In the fullness of time, the clock of prophecy struck, and Christ was born of a virgin into a hostile world to be "wounded for our transgressions, . . . bruised for our iniquities." He appeared "as a root out of a dry ground," without the grandeur and comeliness anticipated, and "his own received him not"—an understatement indeed; for, in fact, they crucified Him. In so doing, however, they aided and abetted His mission.

Having fulfilled that mission, He was caught away to God. But before His departure He spoke these comforting words: "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John 14:3).

Angels later echoed the same promise: "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:11). And the apostle Paul added this forceful prediction: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God" (1 Thess. 4:16). And from heaven itself our Lord uttered the words "Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be" (Rev. 22:12).

Ample Briefing

For nearly 2,000 years the human family has had this knowledge. But there are those who declare this information nonsense. "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning" (2 Peter 3:3, 4). But, Peter hastens to add, "the day of the Lord will come" (verse 10).

The truth is, there is a day and hour when the Lord will come, and the generation nearest the event will know themselves to be living in the last days. The day and hour is known only to God, of course (Matt. 24:36); but of the times and seasons, we need not be ignorant (1 Thess. 5:1, 2, 4).

Jesus Himself was very specific in His references to the last days. His disciples asked Him a pointed question: "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" (Matt. 24:3). In Luke 21:25, He speaks of "signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars." Does not history refer to the dark day of May 19, 1780, and the bloodlike appearance of the moon the night following? And what of the meteoric shower of November 13, 1833? What more dramatic indicators do we need of the end-time?

But there is more. Luke 21:11 speaks of great earthquakes in divers places. Certainly, the great Lisbon earthquake of 1755 marked a turning point in earthquakes in terms of frequency and intensity. Today, we may also turn to Soviet Armenia, Mexico City, California, and China for evidence of fulfillment.

Remember, Jesus Himself is answering the question "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" (Matt. 24:3). Luke 21:11 speaks of famine, or food shortage. Dr. Nausen, who led the relief effort during the great Russian famine of 1921-1922, estimates that 3 million people died in it. Dr. D. O. Lively, of the Relief Agency of America, says that 12 million people died in China of famine just a little later. Jesus foresaw this enormous tragedy and identified it with the end-time.

BY EARL E.
CLEVELAND

In Luke 21:11, He added "pestilences" to the list of signs. The influenza epidemic of 1918-1919 qualifies as one of the greatest epidemics ever known. Some 20 million people in Europe, Asia, America, and Africa died from it. One encyclopedia describes it as "the crowning tragedy of so many tragic years." And with the coming of the AIDS epidemic, we may safely say that the end is near.

How He Will Come

The manner of our Lord's return now claims our attention. Jesus describes it as being a public, earthshaking event. "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be" (Matt. 24:27). And continuing, He says: "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory" (verse 30).

At His second coming, Christ will raise the righteous dead. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first" (1 Thess. 4:16). It is significant that the wicked, who would not listen to God in life, will not hear His voice in death on resurrection morning.

In glorified bodies, by contrast, the living righteous will be caught away to God "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed" (1 Cor. 15:51, 52). "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thess. 4:17).

This glorious reunion of the righteous living with the resurrected dead is one of the thrilling aspects of the Second Coming. It provides strong motivation for us to "die in the Lord," or be found "living in the Lord" in that glad hour.

But the thought that warms the heart of this writer most is that we shall at last meet Jesus, our Redeemer, Lord, Saviour, and friend. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we do know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is" (1 John 3:2). Moses, Elijah, Peter, James, and John saw Him in a measure of glory. Not even they could behold the full measure of His power, for no man can behold God's full glory and live. But in our post-resurrection, post-translation state, "we shall see him as he is." Oh, that will be glory for me!

In the light of the above, it is difficult to conceive that there is a secret rapture theory embraced by millions.

The coming of Christ will be literal, visible, and earthshaking. "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him" (Rev. 1:7).

Preparation

Preparation for the coming of the Lord is our most urgent business. Time for this vital work is in short supply. The prophetic image of Daniel 2 makes this clear. From Babylon, represented by the head of gold, to Rome, represented by the legs of iron, the world passed through four world empires. Inclusive, they spanned nearly 1,100 years of historical time. Within the context of this vision, we are more than 1,500 years into the feet of the image of human civilization. The iron mixed with clay constituting the feet indicates that world dictatorships ended with Rome.

And there is no more human anatomy beyond the feet. Obviously, these are the final days of human administration on this planet. "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever" (Dan. 2:44).

This is the second coming of Christ in prophecy. His coming smites man's earthly achievements like a stone that batters and consumes. No secret rapture here. "Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and it break in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure" (verse 45).

Seek the Lord

So what must we do? The ancient prophet tells us: "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call upon him while he is near: let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon" (Isa. 55:6, 7). This surely is the time to seek the Lord—through prayer, through the study of the Word, and in our Christian witness.

A storm of persecution is soon to break upon the world. The time is late. In this dark hour of human history, God will deliver His people, and a firmament of chosen ones will shine as stars against the black sky of human misery, as a succession of catastrophic events follow in quick succession. All of this will culminate in the second coming of Christ our Lord with power and great glory. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Before his retirement in 1976, Elder Cleveland served as associate secretary of the Ministerial Department of the General Conference. Currently he serves as adjunct professor of evangelism and dynamics of Christian religion at Oakwood College.

Why the Delay?

A personal approach to a troubling phenomenon

Every so often I go back and try to imagine what the Millerites went through in 1844. I try to imagine what it must have felt like in July of that year to believe that Jesus would return in exactly three months' time—on October 22. And then, on August 22—two months! On September 22—one month! October 1—three weeks! October 15—seven days! October 19—three days! October 22—today!

As the day wore on, excitement must have filled the ranks of the waiting pilgrims. Any minute now!

Then 6:00 p.m. came and went. Perhaps reasoning that the Lord might be on Roman time, they continued their vigil past 10:00 p.m., past 11:00 p.m., until the big clock tolled midnight. At last their disappointment was complete. And as one of their members later reported, they wept and wept till the dawn of day.¹

I wonder how many of those Millerites would ever have dreamed that time was to continue another 149 years! Yet here we are—still in this world.

What's going on here? How do we grapple with the question of the apparent delay of the Advent? Let me share with you my personal approach to the issue.

The Integrity of Jesus

I like to get back to the essence of things. And so the first thing I do is to satisfy myself as regards the certainty of the event itself. In other words, regardless of the when of the Second Advent, I try to settle in my own mind the fact of the Advent. Will this extraordinary event occur?

And the answer, for me, is yes.

I arrive at this affirmation by remembering who made the promise in the first place. I see Jesus sitting on the Mount of Olives, addressing a worried and apprehensive group of followers. And I hear Him pronounce those immortal words found in John 14:1-3: "Do not let your hearts be troubled. Trust in God;

BY ROY ADAMS

trust also in me. In my Father's house are many rooms; if it were not so, I would have told you. I am going there to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come back and take you to be with me that you also may be where I am" (NIV).

And I believe Him!

To strengthen my belief, I take a lesson from the promise of the First Advent. That promise, given way back in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 3:15), waited thousands of years for fulfillment. Sages and prophets peered into the shadowy distance for it; and every mother in Israel, beginning with Mother Eve, hoped that she would be the one to nestle the world's Redeemer on her breast.

But they were disappointed—again and again and again, generation after generation after generation. Until that day when the angel Gabriel was dispatched from the presence of God to a humble peasant girl in the little ghost of a town called Nazareth—who had ever heard of Nazareth! The Bible says that "when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son" (Gal. 4:4)—through a young woman in Nazareth.

And the angels sang to wondering shepherds: "Unto you is born this day [after 1.8 million days] in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:11).

Yes, the promise of the First Advent was delayed, so to speak, for 4,000 or 5,000 years. The sun rose and set millions of times without seeing its fulfillment. But the promise did not fail. For it was anchored on the unshakable word of the living God.

And so it will be with the second coming of Jesus.

So that's how I look at it. A natural skeptic, I nevertheless find myself completely satisfied by the absolute integrity of the One who uttered that great promise to His followers 2,000 years ago. At this level of consideration, time has nothing to do with it.

Roy Adams is an associate editor of the Adventist Review.

Only one thing matters: certainty. The grass may wither, and the promises of mortal beings may fail. But the “word of our God shall stand forever!” (Isa. 40:8).

But Integrity Has Its Problems

If we were dealing with a charlatan, a delayed or broken promise would be no problem. That would be expected. But—and this is the issue—if Jesus is a person of integrity, then what are we to make of the fact that 19 centuries have now elapsed since He made that famous promise that day on the Mount of Olives? How long before we conclude that the promise is futile, empty? Would we be as generous and understanding with anyone else? Would we still consider Christ’s integrity undamaged if the sun should rise on a year called 2193? Or worse, 2293? At what point, in other words, do we conclude that we have been following “cunningly devised fables”?

This line of questioning, I believe, points to the reason for the great prophetic outlines of the Bible. These outlines fill the period since the cross with content. In other words, the centuries are not empty. The prophetic delineations, like signposts, have marked the way for us, showing us the progress in salvation history. After Adventist pioneer F. E. Belden had followed these prophetic markers through Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, Rome, and the divided kingdoms of today, he asked the question “What will the next great, glorious drama be?” And then he answered: “Christ and His coming, and eternity.”

But while we expect that “the next great, glorious drama” will be the second coming of Jesus, we are living today, since the end of the great outline prophecies, in a largely unmarked period, a period that puts faith to the utmost test.

On Borrowed Time

To grapple with this problem, I fall back to the concept of “borrowed time.” And for me, one of the most instructive examples of this in the Scriptures is the experience recorded in 2 Kings 20.

In the midst of a prosperous reign, this 39-year-old monarch was suddenly stricken with a fatal disease. The doctors could do nothing for him. The prophet Isaiah came to him—not to pray for his healing, but, on the contrary, to announce his death: “Set thine house in order,” said the messenger of the Lord, “for thou shalt die, and not live” (verse 1).

The outlook for Hezekiah was as bleak as could be. With all his little remaining strength, he managed to turn away from his servants and bodyguards; and with his face toward the wall in privacy, he prayed to the One who had always been his refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble.

God heard him and the answer was immediate: “This is what the Lord, the God of your father David, says: I have heard your prayer and seen your tears; I will heal you. . . . I will add fifteen years to your life” (verses 4-6, NIV). Just think about it—15 years added to his life, 15 years of borrowed time!

I believe God has given the same break to us on a universal scale. We are living today on borrowed time. This fact emerges clearly, I think, as one reviews the great sweep of the biblical time prophecies that show a chronological movement from a specific point in history to the climax of the age. Revelation 6, dealing with the opening of the seals, is one of those prophecies. Using the historicist method of interpretation, it is possible to trace the fortunes of God’s church and people from the first century on down to the end of the world.

The first events under the sixth seal (verses 12-14)—the great earthquake (Lisbon, 1755), the Dark Day (America, 1780), the falling of the “stars” (eastern United States, 1833)—take us down near the middle of the nineteenth century. Every indication is that we are now living, as the old-timers used to say, between verses 13 and 14 of Revelation 6, between the great meteoric shower of 1833 and the “receding” of the heavens.

But if our interpretation is correct and the event of verse 13 occurred way back in 1833, then we have been in a holding pattern now for 160 years! Why?

Amazing Love

The answer, I believe, is the unfathomable patience and mercy of a loving God. For the next major event after the falling of the stars is one of total chaos: “The sky receded like a scroll, rolling up,” the Scripture says, “and every mountain and island was removed from its place.” The most frightening catastrophe in the history of humanity, it leads the wicked from every walk of life to cry out for death rather than confront “the face of him who sits on the throne and . . . the wrath of the Lamb.” “Who can stand?” they ask (Rev. 6:14-17, NIV).

It was to answer that last question that Revelation 7 was written. Interrupting the natural flow of the opening of the seals, the chapter not only answers the question posed but also, inadvertently, gives one reason for the delay. Angels are pictured holding back

*A thousand points of conflict since World War II have not provoked a third world war.
Why?*

the winds of strife until “the servants of our God” are sealed “in their foreheads” (Rev. 7:3).

This passage speaks of a moment when the time of the world is up and the angels of judgment are ready to carry out the “strange act” of God. But, as in the case of Hezekiah on the personal level, there is a respite, an extension of time, a postponement of probation’s close—on the cosmic level.

We have seen many instances in recent years that seem to indicate something of this holding action on the part of God. One assassination incident (in Bosnia) lit the fires of World War I. One invasion (of Poland, by Hitler) set off World War II. Isn’t it remarkable, then, that a thousand points of conflict since the end of World War II, 48 years ago, have not provoked a third world war? Think of the frightening days of the Korean War, or the bloody years of Vietnam, or the tense decade of the cold war—with the Soviet invasion of Hungary and Czechoslovakia. Think of the frightening confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union during the hair-raising Cuban missile crisis in 1962—a crisis that, in the words of then attorney general Robert Kennedy, “brought the world to the abyss of nuclear destruction and the end of mankind.”²

Why did none of these incidents spark a third world war? Because of the restraining action of God, symbolized by the four angels of Revelation 7. God is “not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance” (2 Peter 3:9).

Let us note, however, that the perception of a delay is on our part only. In God’s great timetable, “He hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world” (Acts 17:31).

In my thinking, this does not contradict the concept of God’s long-suffering. I picture (and this is only an illustration) a giant cosmic computer into which God enters the life history of every person. That computer has the capability of coming up with the mind-boggling variables of the lives of each and every person who would walk the face of the earth. God reads the complicated printout and determines when everyone on earth, based on the infinite variables for his or her life, has been given just the right time and opportunity to make a decision for life or death.

Way back in the dateless past, God read the printout and determined a day for the second coming of Jesus. That day is a fixed time that only God knows. When it arrives, Jesus will come. I suspect that no one in heaven will ask the Lord why the wait was so long. Rather, there’ll be tears of joy everywhere when we discover that that “delay” was for us! ☸

¹ Hiram Edson, manuscript fragment. Ellen G. White Estate, General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists.

² Robert Kennedy, Thirteen Days, p. 23.

Making the Most of a Bad Situation

BY CALVIN B. ROCK

I am very discouraged about the situation of the church's spiritual condition. Why aren't Adventists more devout? Will we ever reach the state of perfection needed for the latter rain? Shouldn't the General Conference make a public appeal for revival?

The General Conference often calls for revival. It has done so at every General Conference session (including the recent one in Holland) and it does so annually in the theme and readings of the Week of Prayer.

However, we all must remember that revivals are not "worked up" or decreed by the General Conference; they are "prayed down" by the membership. The primary reason that our spirituality is not greater is not the lack of General Conference appeal or the spiritual failure of any other level of church administration, it is the condition described by our prophetess, Ellen White, as follows: "Ministers should labor earnestly for the youth who have not given themselves to Christ, and also for others who, though their names are on the church roll, are irreligious and Christless. But ministers may do their work faithfully and well, yet it will amount to very little if parents neglect their work. It is to a lack of Christianity in the home life that the lack of power in the church is due" (Child Guidance, p. 550).

Of course, from a practical standpoint there are numerous other reasons we can cite. Among them are: our acceptance of the goals of a materialistic society; our participation in the debilitating excitement of the sports and entertainment worlds; and our alarming lack of personal devotion.

Each of these trends may be viewed as both cause and effect. Either way, they can be countermanded only by vigilant devotion, willing liberality, and a temperate lifestyle. But again, all that is individual. Renewal begins in our hearts and homes, not with General Conference fiat.

As for expecting a perfect church on this side of the close of probation, Ellen White has this to say: "We may create an unreal world in our own mind or picture an ideal church, where the temptations of Satan no longer prompt to evil; but perfection exists only in our

*Revivals are not "worked up"; they are
"prayed down."*

imagination" (Review and Herald, Aug. 8, 1893).

Remember, imperfection began in heaven. Do not despair that it is with us today. Rather, by personal consecration make certain that you, yourself, are part of the solution and not part of the problem.

I often meet people (some in the church) whose reasoning about the Bible is very literalistic and absolutist. Their arguments are so naive and simplistic that it's hard to know how to answer them. And they're so dogmatic and sure about themselves! What's the best way to handle these people?

Reasoning with individuals whose thought processes do not accommodate the relative aspects of history, language, geography, etc., is often very frustrating.

There are two ways I attempt to converse with such persons. One is to try to move them into a more logical reasoning pattern. The other is to make the necessary point within their category of reasoning. While the former attempt is preferable, one is sometimes forced to proceed in the latter mode.

For example, I was once approached by a man who said that Seventh-day Adventists are wrong about the Sabbath. He reasoned that Joshua's making the sun stand still (Joshua 10:11-14) threw time out of sequence. His statement was that while the Sabbath was to be kept until Joshua's time, it was rendered untraceable by the miracle of the standing sun and therefore unobservable since then.

My reply (in his idiom) was "I see what you mean, but what you may not know is that on May 19, 1780, there was a dark day when the sun went down early, and it evened things back together again!"

"Oh, really?" he answered. "Well, that does make a difference, doesn't it?" Then he walked away apparently resigned to the fact that Adventists might be right after all.

Of course, I do not recommend this particular answer or this level of reply, but it is true that "fighting fire with fire" is sometimes the best solution.

But there is a third way to deal with such individuals—just refuse to involve yourself in debate in the first place. Prolonged, even brief, disagreement with an absolutist thinker is often more damaging to truth and good relations than simply avoiding the controversy. ☞

Calvin B. Rock is a general vice president of the General Conference. He holds doctoral degrees in ministry and religious ethics.

Living in Crazy Times

Sometimes it seems like the whole world has gone berserk.

BY ROY ADAMS

"And they came to Jesus and observed the man who had been demon-possessed sitting down, clothed and in his right mind" (Mark 5:15, NASB).

NOVELETTE SINCLAIR WAS A SHY 13-YEAR-old when I knew her at the Westmount church in Montreal in the late sixties. But she grew up to be quite a young woman, excelling in school, "winning a scholarship to the University of Ottawa and earning a master's degree in linguistics in 1977." Later she would teach French in Brussels and win a job as a translator at the United Nations in New York.¹

But one day she met David—as in David Koresh—and everything changed. Forsaking family and friends, she gave him all she had—her means, her body, and finally (together with more than 80 others) her life.

David Koresh. Waco. The names have etched themselves into the psyche of people around the world as symbols of the madness and insanity of our times, taking their place in a kind of rogues' gallery of contemporary insanities that include such random names as Jim Jones, Ruby Ridge, Rwanda, Burundi, Bosnia, the New York Trade Center, and Oklahoma City.

For months I'd been struggling to wrap my head around it all, to define it, to give it a name. Finally, paralyzed by its sheer magnitude and complexity, I sat down one Sabbath morning, a blank notepad in front of me. One frustrating hour and two or three pages of random jottings later, a single compelling thought emerged that seemed to pull it all together for me: the seismic forces tearing society and the church apart at the present time have their roots in three basic factors—(1) an infantile gullibility, (2) a lunatic mentality, and (3) a twisted eschatology.

1. An Infantile Gullibility

You would think it could never happen again—not after Waco. Yet there it was—39 bodies in an upscale neighborhood near San Diego, California, the remains of men and women who'd answered the call by Heaven's Gate cult leader Marshall Applewhite to shed their "containers" (bodies) "and be transported after death by alien spacecraft riding shotgun in the sky for the Hale-Bopp comet."²

My first reaction was "Oh, no, not again!" And the words of Washington Post Magazine writer Jeanne Marie Laskas came back to me. "How many times would we go around this circle?" she asked in the wake of the 1994 Solar Temple tragedy, in which 50 devotees of cult leader Luc Jouret's Order of the Solar Temple died in Switzerland and Canada. "It seems we're back here at the beginning, asking the same questions we were asking a year ago in Waco, Texas. The same questions we asked 16 years ago in Jonestown, Guyana. Apparently this cult story is going to keep repeating itself, as if there's some bad virus embedded in the human condition."³

Zeroing in on the amazing human gullibility even in our sophisticated times, Laskas told of her encounter with an Arizona-based group known as CBJ, after the initials of its three leaders: Charles, BernaDeane, and Jim (known to their followers as "Chuck-bernie-and-jim"). These three shysters go around the world, she says, "teaching people how to be immortal." What we need, say the threesome, is "cellular awakening." "People who die are just stupid people, . . . people whose cells have been brainwashed by 'the death-oriented culture' into which we all were born. In order to become immortal, . . . all you have to do is to get your cells awakened by CBJ and then join with them in 'cellular intercourse.'"⁴

Someone from another planet might ask: "Who could possibly fall for such preposterous poppycock?" But after Marshall Applewhite and Heaven's Gate, we on this planet no longer wonder. Suckers for such nonsense could include college and university graduates just as easily as folk who've never heard a school bell ring. They could be people who have never as much as seen a telephone, or whiz kids able to program sophisticated computers.

And the lesson of Waco is that Adventists are not immune. More than 50 percent of those who perished in that blaze had an Adventist connection. Do certain aspects of our teachings (or the way we package them) contribute to this kind of insanity? Or is it that our teachings tend to attract people with a predisposition for the wacky? And do we sufficiently encourage careful, analytical, hard-nosed thinking among our members?

Consider the fact, however, that the people who fell for Koresh's claims were not all stupid or uneducated. Novelette Sinclair, for one, was "a bright young woman who was clever enough to win university scholarships and capable enough to embark on an international career as a linguist, translator, and teacher."⁵ Yet she accepted Koresh's claim to be the new Messiah, "the seventh and final angel who will bring about the end of the world." And with all the others she swallowed it when he claimed "that by sleeping with him" his female followers would become "brides of Christ."⁶

Never should we underestimate the psychic grip of the cult leader. After attending a series of CBJ meetings, Laskas concluded "that people can have other people believing anything if the conditions are right. . . . People can be trained to believe in the ludicrous world according to Chuck-bernie-and-jim just as easily as they can the world according to Luc Jouret, David Koresh, Jim Jones, Charles Manson, Hitler. Anybody. People can be trained to sleepwalk their way into turning over their bank accounts, into drinking Kool-Aid laced with potassium cyanide, into shooting themselves in the head. Anything."⁷

And consider that after all the press coverage following the Heaven's Gate tragedy, one follower still went ahead with a copycat suicide weeks later, another follower was unsuccessful in the attempt, and the hotel in which the suicide occurred was flooded with calls from people wanting to book the same room, presumably for the same purpose.

People should know that when God calls us to serve Him, He does not ask us to disengage our intellects, to put our minds into neutral. No, He calls us to love Him with all our heart, and with all our soul, and with all our mind (Matt. 22:37). God is interested in the state of our mind:

"And they came to Jesus and observed the man who had been demon-possessed sitting down, clothed and in his right mind."

2. A Lunatic Mentality

Remember the March 1995 poison gas attack in a Tokyo subway by members of the Aum Shinrikyo cult that killed 12 people and injured 5,000? In a Tokyo courtroom last April the cult's 41-year-old guru, Shoko Asahara, gave his first public explanation of the incident—a classic in demented rambling: "Mr. Asahara said he had ordered his top aides to abort the planned gas attack two days before it occurred," but they disobeyed his orders. Instead, he said, they "persuaded him to go ahead with the attack." "In the end, it was me who was convinced by them," he said.

'And that eventually led to my arrest.'"⁸

How frightening to think that such a bungling maniac was the head of an outfit with enough nerve gas and equipment to kill millions of people!

But even more significant than the intention of such groups is the lunatic ideology that drives them—an ideology of imagined conspiracy, an ideology that leads them to believe the fantastic and the bizarre.

And their number is growing. "What should be made of the fact," asks Liz Spayd, "that more than half of all Americans think flying saucers are real? That 49 percent of the public thinks the CIA was involved in the assassination of President Kennedy? Or that 9 percent of the public suspects, despite considerable evidence to the contrary, that the 1969 moon landing was a massive hoax?"¹⁰

Obsession with conspiracy—that's part of the craziness of our times. Each weekend finds small groups of men and women in Army fatigues training in some backwoods farm or forest in the U.S. against the day when, as they believe, federal government troops out to abolish individual rights will launch an attack on ordinary citizens. "Citizen militias, in what has emerged as one of the most vivid symbols of contemporary conspiracy, insist that United Nations troops are circling around in black helicopters that they intend to use in a mass coup."¹¹

And there are conspiracy theorists among us, too. When I visited one country in the South Pacific some years ago, one pastor took me aside and for about a half hour flooded my head with conspiracy theories—from Germany to Russia, from the United States to China, some dating clear back to medieval times. And he was telling me all this in an effort to set up an appointment to tell me more. Such are the people who can flesh out undercover Jesuits operating at the General Conference.

But if we see madness on the right, we see it also on the left—a moral madness that threatens to engulf us all. Even amid the rationalism of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and well into the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, the lines of morality and basic decency were pretty clearly drawn. Today, however, everything is blurred. And even conservative Christian people (including Seventh-day Adventists) are showing increasing signs of confusion.

American and Canadian culture today is virtually under the control of Hollywood, an outfit that contaminates everything it touches—whether it be education, family, God, sex, or angels. Today most of the stuff coming from this giant molder of contemporary morals is nothing less than illustrated sermons from hell, exposing our children to hard-core portrayals of adult behavior in prime time.

God will hold the adult generation responsible for the state of our children. It is we who have stolen their innocence. We have corrupted them. We have ripened them before their time. In the name of freedom of speech we are producing a generation of young people who are cold, emotionless, and absolutely without conscience—human beasts.

And it's getting worse. Commenting on daytime talk shows in America, Tom Shales notes that there is a race on "to be more outrageous, more salacious, more sensational." For a few minutes of fame, he says, people will divulge "their darkest secrets and their dirtiest laundry." Moreover, "the intense competition that results from Sometimes I wonder if this may not be the time of trouble in disguise.

having more than two dozen of these programs now on the air inspires producers to aim not higher, but in fact lower; you can only outdo the other guy, it seems, by stooping further, by going for more sleaze and shouts and shocks." What we are watching, says Shales, is "the trashification of American culture."¹²

Today we have the technology to bring every species of trash and filth directly into our homes merely by a few clicks on the mouse beside our computers. And minors, generally far in advance of their parents and elders in computer literacy, are dabbling in this hard-core stuff in the privacy of their homes. If I were the devil out to destabilize human society, I would do exactly what he's doing now. I would glorify gratuitous violence, glamorize illicit sex, and make it chic to be deviant. And I would make those who dare speak out against these things look like benighted Victorian pruders—Neanderthals belonging to the unlit caves of a distant age.

We have come to an exceedingly dangerous time. It is, in all likelihood, perhaps the most unstable moral situation of any civilization in the history of humankind. Sometimes I wonder if this is not the time of trouble in disguise. The entire moral ground is shifting under our feet. We are treading on quicksand.

The only solution for the present lunacy is Jesus. We must bring our folly to Him. We must bring our anger, our pride, our stupidity, our ignorance, our vulgarity, our immorality, our lunatic mentality, to Him. Only He can drive the demons out. He alone can give us hope.

"And they came to Jesus and observed the man who had been demon-possessed sitting down, clothed and in his right mind."

3. A Twisted Eschatology

Washington Post Magazine staff writer Peter Carlson went to Philadelphia back in 1994 to visit a certain Ted Daniels, editor/publisher of something called the "Millennium Prophecy Report." Daniels, holder of a Ph.D. in folklore from the University of Pennsylvania, had been monitoring prophetic predictions across the United States in connection with the year 2000.

From the back of a postcard with the picture of a flying saucer, Daniels read Carlson the following prophecy: "In A.D. 2001, starships from the Interplanetary Confederation [whatever that is] will land on earth carrying 33,000 Brothers! They're extraterrestrial teachers and scientists who will help us expand our understanding."¹³ Carlson's article, a brilliant summary of the tremendous hype in the run-up to the year 2000, is a must-read for every Adventist who can still get hold of it. Cataloging the increasing preoccupation of American culture with the coming millennium, Carlson notes the rush on the part of commerce, industry, and just about every sector of contemporary American society to capitalize on the millennium motif.

Citing an NBC television special in the spring of 1994, "Ancient Prophecies," Carlson noted the following confluence of predictions pointing toward the year 2000:

"The pyramids contain a coded calendar that shows the world ending on May 5, 2000. . . . Saint Malachy of Ireland predicted in the 1100s the names of all the popes until the end of time, and there are two popes to go. . . .

Nostradamus saw disaster coming from the sky in 1999. . . . The Blessed Virgin appeared at Fatima making a prediction that is so frightening that the pope is keeping it secret. . . . The book of Revelation portrays an apocalypse that may begin soon. . . . Edgar Cayce, the famous 'sleeping prophet,' predicted that before 1998 the poles would shift and California would fall into the sea. . . . Paul Solomon, known as the 'second Cayce,' predicted that America would split right down the middle in the year 2000. . . . The ancient cabala says that a ball of fire will descend on man around the millennium."¹⁴

What is likely to be the effect of such speculation on the minds of people today? An obvious one will be to damage the integrity and authority of the Bible. There could hardly be a more effective way of undermining Scripture than by associating it, as the NBC program did, with a catalog of hodge-dodge prognostications.

Another possible fallout from the growing contemporary hysteria could be a damaging effect on prophetic preaching. For if the Lord delays His coming much beyond 2000, the present hype could just as easily be followed by chronic cynicism. Millions will shrug their shoulders and say: "Where is the promise of his coming?" (2 Peter 3:4).

Yet that is our only hope. "If we lose this hope," as H.M.S. Richards, Sr., used to say, "we lose everything."

But however eager we are for the Lord to come, we ought never to resort to irresponsible speculation. Some of our writers are reverting to jubilee calculations. Some are reading their own ideas into Ellen White's references to "6,000 years" as the reign of sin on earth. But to give any specifics for the time of the Advent—whether it be a particular month, year, decade, or generation—is to fall into the trap of time-setting.

It is a precarious time for Seventh-day Adventists. None of us wants to come across as putting off the coming of Christ. None of us wants to say that Christ could not come back by the year 2000. And yet from past experience we can see the dangerous fallacy of the present excitement and paranoia. The situation is immensely tricky.

Here's where I take my stand. It is clear to me that the fulfillment of the foundational, milestone prophecies of the Bible—the great earthquake, the Dark Day, the crimson moon, and the great meteoric shower—are all behind us now, far behind us. And the implication for me is that the Second Coming can be any time now.

But it has nothing to do with the year 2000, or with the jubilee calendar, or with some other fantastic forecast dreamed up in the fertile imagination of excitable zealots inside or outside the church. It is the broad spectrum of prophecy that convinces me that the day is approaching.

And what a day it will be when from all around the world we will come and, like the ancient demoniac, fall at the feet of Jesus our king—our infantile gullibility gone, our lunatic mentality cured, our twisted eschatology corrected in the marvelous light of His glorious presence.

It will be a new world order. A planet transformed. Perfect temperature. Perfect climate. No allergies. No pain. No sickness. No disappointment. No guns. No muggings. No jails. No hospitals. No war. No land mines. No pollution. No racism. No exploitation. No poverty. No slums. No police. No prostitution. No perversion. No gambling. No crime of any kind. No more death. And if all my readers were Americans, I would say, "No more taxes!"

Yes, we're living in crazy times. But I know that God's tomorrow will be better than today. ■

¹ Andrew Phillips et al., in Maclean's, May 3, 1993, p. 20.

² U.S. News & World Report, Apr. 7, 1997, p. 26.

³ Jeanne Marie Laskas, "Predators and Prayers," Washington Post Magazine, Nov. 6, 1994, p. 5.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Maclean's, p. 17.

⁶ Ibid., pp. 21, 22.

⁷ Laskas, p. 5.

⁸ New York Times, Apr. 25, 1997, p. A-7.

⁹ See "Cult Guru Accused . . ." New York Times, Apr. 25, 1997, p. A-7.

¹⁰ Liz Spayd, "Welcome to the State of Paranoia," Washington Post, July 23, 1995, p. C-1.

¹¹ Ibid., p. C-2.

¹² Tom Shales, "We're Mad as Hell . . . at Daytime TV, Getting Sleazier by the Minute," Washington Post, Mar. 19, 1995, p. G-5.

¹³ Peter Carlson, "The End," Washington Post Magazine, Jan. 1, 1995, p. 10.

¹⁴ Ibid., p. 13.

Roy Adams is an associate editor of the Adventist Review.

